MEMORANDUM TO ENUMERATORS ON THE SUBJECT OF OCCUPATIONS 854

CENSUS OF 1911.

TO THE RIGHT HONOURABLE HERBERT SAMUEL, M.P.,

PRESIDENT OF THE LOCAL GOVERNMENT BOARD, ETC.

CENSUS OFFICE,

LONDON, S.W.,

29*th May*, 1914.

SIR,

We have the honour to submit the detailed results of the tabulation of the occupations of the population as classified from the returns made at the twelfth decennial census of England and Wales, and of the industries with which workers engaged in the several occupations are connected. The tables in this volume relate to the whole population of the areas dealt with, special sections of the population being tabulated in the volume relating to Birthplaces (Volume IX.), which includes statistics of the occupations of foreigners, and in the volume relating to Infirmities (Volume XI.), which includes tables showing the occupations of persons returned as "totally blind" or as "deaf and dumb."

1. RETURNS MADE AT PREVIOUS CENSUSES.

The occupations of the people have been regarded as forming a proper subject of inquiry at every census that has been taken in this country, though the method and scope of the inquiry have from time to time been modified in accordance with the cumulative experience of successive enumerations. It is scarcely necessary to review in detail the procedure followed on each occasion, but a brief summary of the leading features is essential in order to show how the present system has been developed.

1801–1831 —At the first census only a very broad classification of occupations was attempted. The overseer of each parish, upon whom devolved the duties of enumeration, was required to state "What number of persons in your Parish, Township or Place are chiefly employed in Agriculture, how many in Trade, Manufactures or Handicraft; and how many are not comprised in any of the preceding Classes?" Notwithstanding the simple form of this question, it was found in practice to produce no valuable result. Thus the report on the census of 1831 states, in reference to the first census, that "In some cases a Householder seemed to understand that the females of his family, his children, and servants ought to be classed with himself; in some cases he returned them in the negative class, as being neither agricultural nor commercial; in some cases he omitted them entirely. Thus the failure of the question became manifest, and the worthless answers were entered without attempt at correction."

The form of question was therefore altered in 1811 so as to relate to families instead of persons, the returns still being made by the overseers. The report on that census indicates that the replies were generally satisfactory, but states that "in the answers respecting the families employed in Agriculture, a remarkable proof occurred of the difficulty of putting any question which shall be universally understood. In some places the Occupiers of Land, but not Labourers in Agriculture, are supposed to belong to that class; in other places exactly the contrary."

In 1821 and 1831 the question as to occupation was repeated in the same form as in 1811, but in 1831 several additional questions were put to the overseers. These additional questions related to males aged 20 years and upwards, who were tabulated in nine classes, viz. :—

(1) Agricultural Occupiers employing Labourers.
(2) Agricultural Occupiers not employing Labourers.
(3) Labourers employed in Agriculture.
(4) Employed in Manufacture or in making Manufacturing Machinery.
(5) Employed in Retail Trade or Handicraft as Masters or Workmen.
(6) Capitalists, Bankers, Professional and other Educated Men.
(7) Labourers, not Agricultural.
(8) Servants.
(9) Others.

The fifth class was also returned in detail by means of a form containing "one hundred of the most usual denominations of Retail Trade and Handicraft," the list being extended by the overseers, where necessary, to meet local conditions. No attempt, however, was made to compile a classified list of occupations ; and the alphabetical summary for England and Wales was defective on account of the lack of uniformity in making up the lists for the separate parishes, the overseers having made up their own lists on such different principles that the summary compiled from them was quite unreliable.

1841.—In 1841 advantage was taken of the recently established system of civil registration to remodel the whole machinery of the census. Instead of numerical summaries prepared by the overseer of each parish, particulars of individual persons were recorded on schedules furnished to every householder and collected by enumerators acting under the direction of the local Registrars of Births and Deaths. These schedules were copied into books which were transmitted to the Census Office, where the work of classifying the occupations from the information supplied by the people themselves was carried out under definite rules and on uniform lines for the whole country. Some idea of the sub-division of labour and of the difficulty of classification even at that early date may be gained from the fact, noted in the 1841 Report, that "the number of different titles under which the various persons employed in cotton manufacture were returned, amounted to 1,255," which, for convenience of publication, were condensed under the general heading "Cotton manufacture, all branches." The codification of the various occupations was, however, by no means complete at that census, for the published figures for England and Wales related to no fewer than 877 occupational headings presented in alphabetical order without any further attempt at arrangement beyond (1) a statement showing the numbers engaged in certain mining, metal, and textile industries, and in the manufacture of engines and machines, pottery, glass, and gloves, and (2) a rough grouping of the occupations under 16 large and, in some cases, very miscellaneous headings.

1851-1901.—The method of collecting and digesting the returns adopted in 1841 was found to be so successful as compared with that of previous censuses that the general procedure has been followed with more or less important modification on every subsequent occasion. The principal defect of the statistics of 1841 was the unsatisfactory manner in which they were arranged ; for, as was stated in the Report on the Census of 1901 (page 73), "an unclassified return, arranged alphabetically, is of little value because kindred occupations are separated, although the line of demarcation between them is often indefinite or non-existent."

With a view to remedying this defect the occupational headings were in 1851 arranged under 17 "Classes," comprising 91 "Sub-classes," or, as they have been designated at later censuses, "Orders" and "Sub-orders." In 1861 a book of instructions to the clerks employed in classifying the occupations of the people was drawn up. This contained a list of occupational terms arranged under their appropriate "Orders" and "Sub-orders," and arranged alphabetically for convenience of reference, the terms being copied mostly from directories of London and other large towns. In 1871 the list was revised from similar sources, but in 1881 a more extended compilation was made from information collected by means of circulars sent out to leading manufacturers and supplemented by a preliminary examination of the census returns from the chief industrial centres. By means of these books of instructions, which have been revised from time to time, with the object of obtaining uniformity of treatment of the returns at each census, as well as continuity of treatment at successive censuses, so far as this has been found compatible with the need for increased precision and detail of tabulation, and with the changes necessitated by industrial development. Modifications of detail have, of course, been rendered necessary principally by the introduction of new occupations, and, to a less extent, by the elimination of terms that have become obsolete.

Another important alteration initiated in 1851 was the introduction of a more detailed grouping by ages. Instead of the two divisions of "under 20" and "over 20," the figures were shown for quinquennial groups. The sub-division, especially in the advanced ages, was, however, found to be of little practical utility; and some changes in the age groupings have been made at each of the later censuses, until in 1901 the figures were shown in the principal tables in ten groups of ages, viz.:—10 and under 14, 14, 15 and under 20, 20 and under 25, decennial groups from 25 to 75, and in one group 75 and upwards; the occupations of children at each year of age from 10 to 14 were given in a supplementary table. In 1901, also, the table distinguished for the first time the unmarried from the married or widowed females.

The general principles of classification adopted in 1851 were followed closely at the next two censuses, but in 1881 two important changes were effected. Up to 1871, persons described as "retired" from any stated occupation had been classed to such occupation. From 1881 onwards, such retired persons (with the exception of officers in the army and navy, and, until 1911, clergymen and medical practitioners) have been included with the "unoccupied"; as have also inmates of workhouses over 60 years of age, and inmates of lunatic asylums of whatever ages, on the assumption that such persons would probably be unable to resume their employment. Among other changes made at the census in 1881, clerks, porters, engine drivers, stokers, carmen, etc., who had formerly been classed to the separate manufacture or trade with which their work was connected, were collected under the headings "Commercial Clerk," "Messenger, Porter," etc. These changes, although tending to a more scientific classification of occupations, seriously reduced the value of comparisons between the figures for 1881 and those for earlier censuses. Such changes in classification as were made in 1891 and 1901 are shown in detail in the reports of those censuses (see Census of 1891, Volume IV., pages 133-5; and Census of 1901, General Report, pages 245-255), and for the latter census are also shown in Table 25, pages 524-539. It will be seen from the 1901 volume that there was considerable revision of the occupational headings, and that some of the changes then introduced were made as the result of suggestions from the Home Office and the Board of Trade, and with the view of bringing the census statistics into line with those issued by the Departments concerned.

2. SCOPE OF THE INQUIRY.

Previous to the recent census the whole subject was thoroughly reconsidered in consultation with the other Government Departments concerned, but no serious modification of the classification of occupations adopted in 1901, which had proved satisfactory, was considered necessary or advisable. Such changes as were made were mainly in the direction of sub-dividing some of the headings, and providing for occupations of recent growth; altogether the number of separate headings in the tables, which were 347 in 1891 and 382 in 1901, have now been increased to 472.

No inquiry as to unemployment was made at this or at any previous census, and persons temporarily out of work on census day were on this occasion instructed in the schedule to state their usual occupation. Such persons have, therefore, been classified under the several occupational headings.

In one important respect, however, the inquiry in 1911 has been extended beyond that of former censuses. Hitherto only the personal occupation has been asked for, though from 1891 onwards a supplementary question as to status—i.e., whether employer, working for an employer, or working on own account—had been added, and in 1901 persons carrying on trade or industry "at home" were required to state that fact also. The census classification based on these returns of personal occupation has related partly to definite personal occupations which may be common to several different industries, and partly to industries which may comprise many distinct occupations. Thus, clerks, messengers, porters, carmen, and engine drivers or stokers, who are engaged in occupations which are of very similar character in the many industries with which they may be connected, are classified according to their personal occupations; in most other cases persons are classified according to the manufacture, trade, or service with which they are connected, although some of the larger industries are sub-divided in the tables to show the principal personal occupations in those industries.

Both the personal and industrial classifications of occupations have their particular uses, the former being useful especially in connexion with questions of vital statistics and the latter in connexion with questions of economics. The classification which has been evolved in this country combines both these objects, but fulfils neither of them completely. At the censuses 1851-1871 the industrial classification was more closely followed than it has been from 1881 onwards, but it is quite certain that for a very large proportion of the workers following certain occupations common to many industries no statement was made in the schedule as to the industry with which they were connected, and the limited information derived from the single question as to occupation must be held to have given unsatisfactory returns both as to personal occupation and as to industry. This is clearly shown in the 1871 census tables by the numbers of clerks, carmen, messengers, and engine drivers, simply returned as such, but who, according to the rules in use at that date, should have been classified to the trade or manufacture with which they were connected. The large proportion which these numbers bore to the total engaged in these occupations is evident on comparison with the figures for 1881 and 1891, which were as follows :—

Clerks (not Government, Army, Law, Bank, Insurance, Railway)	90,078	175,468	229,370
Carmen, Carriers, Carters, Wagoners (not Farm)	77,177	124,611	169,283
Messengers, Porters, Watchmen	94,109	129,561	175,553
Engine Drivers, Stokers, Firemen (not Railway, Marine, or Agricultural)	31,026	66,137	82,056

This consideration, no doubt, led to the alteration in the principle of classification in 1881, when personal occupation rather than industry was tabulated in certain cases.

On the present occasion an experiment has been made on a considerable scale in order to test the feasibility of introducing a consistently personal classification of occupations, which should tabulate by the nature of the process performed by the individual worker those sections of the list which are now classified only according to the nature of the product or of the material worked in. For this purpose headings were selected, with the assistance of the Home Office, including a mixture of processes, some of them specially dangerous to health and others not. It was hoped by ascertaining the numbers of workers actually engaged upon the dangerous processes to secure great improvement in our knowledge of occupational mortality. Special cards were prepared for over 700,000 workers in the selected headings, and the description given in the schedule of the actual occupation was written on each card. The cards were then sorted by hand according to the process carried on, persons classified to the headings "Cutlers; Scissors Makers," and "Tool Makers," for instance, being divided into buffers, grinders, finishers, etc., and makers of tools, scissors, razors, etc., as the case might be, who gave no further description of their occupation. The latter class was found in most cases to be so large that on the whole the attempt can only be characterised as a decided failure. As a result of the experience so gained, we have reluctantly come to the conclusion that, unless by some improved means of collecting census information the nature of the material to be tabulated can be greatly improved, any logically consistent tabulation in our census of workers by personal occupation is unattainable, and that the present system of classification partly by occupation and partly by product must be adhered to.

While complete tabulation by personal occupation has thus proved, for the present at least, impossible, we have been able to secure consistently industrial tabulation by classifying the persons grouped under headings relating to personal occupations by the industry or service with which they are connected, thus ascertaining the total numbers employed in various industries or groups of industries and services.

The two-fold information necessary for this double classification, by occupation and by industry, has been sought by means of an additional column (Col. 11) on the schedule. The column in which occupation was to be entered related to "personal occupation," while for persons returned as working for an employer the industry or service with which they were connected, as indicated by the "nature of employer's business," was to be entered in the column provided for that purpose when this was not clearly shown by the description in the preceding column. By this means much better information has incidentally been obtained with regard to occupation, the addition of the industry often being useful in determining the nature of an imperfectly described occupation. In fact, the considerable reduction in the numbers returned under indefinite headings, such as "General Labourer," must be ascribed quite as much to the information supplied in the "industry" column as to improvement in the returns in the "occupation" column.

Every addition to the schedule increases the difficulty experienced by the ordinary occupier in making the required return. With a view, therefore, to minimising the difficulty as to the occupation and industry columns, not only were the instructions on the schedule itself amplified, but a special memorandum was issued to the enumerators to enable them to give any explanation or assistance that might be required. This memorandum, which will be found on pages 854 to 860, contained detailed instructions as to the precise nature of the information required, and was supplemented by additional instructions (see pages 860 to 867) relating to (a) Mining and Quarrying, (b) Textile Trades, and (c) Metal, Engineering, Shipbuilding, etc. Trades. Moreover, we have to thank the Board of Agriculture and Fisheries and the Parliamentary Committee of the Trades Union Congress for their co-operation in issuing explanatory memoranda on the subject of the occupational return, which very usefully supplemented the instruction given, as in 1901, in the elementary schools.

3. PROCESSES OF TABULATION.

As at previous censuses, the first step in the process of tabulation was to train a staff of clerks in the responsible work of classification, and for this purpose each clerk was furnished with a book of instructions containing alphabetical and classified lists of occupational terms. This "dictionary" was based upon that used at the census of 1901, and its preparation involved a great deal of correspondence with large employers of labour and others, to whom we are much indebted for their willing co-operation in its compilation. The very extensive and detailed lists furnished by some of our correspondents were carefully digested and were embodied in the new issue of the dictionary, the revision of which was a laborious process, and resulted in a very considerable addition to the bulk of the volume.

The utility of this occupational dictionary, now containing upwards of 30,000 different terms by which the people of this country describe their occupations, is, however, not limited to the primary purpose for which it has been designed. It has, for instance, been found useful by the Board of Trade, copies having been supplied to that Department for disposal among the Labour Exchanges, which by this means were enabled to co-ordinate their returns with those of the census. With a view, therefore, to making the dictionary as widely accessible as possible, it is now for the first time being issued to the public as an appendix to this volume, and will permit anyone studying the tables to see exactly how they have been compiled and what are the exact contents of the more composite headings in the census classification. It is hoped, also, that the publication of the dictionary may lead to increased interest in the classification, and that it may elicit suggestions for its improvement on a future occasion.

While, however, the preliminaries to the tabulation have not been materially altered at this census, the actual processes have been entirely changed in order to admit of greater detail in the tabulation. We have already referred in a previous volume of the Report (see Volume VII., page vi.) to the increased detail in the published statistics of Ages rendered possible by the adoption of the system of tabulation by cards on which are recorded by means of punched holes the particulars contained in the schedules, the cards afterwards being sorted and counted by electrical tabulating machinery. This system of tabulation requires the adoption of a numerical code to represent the classified occupational headings. The entries in the schedules were therefore marked with the appropriate number by the clerks in accordance with the rules contained in their book of instructions, and these code numbers were subsequently punched on the cards. The information contained in the "industry" column of the schedule was similarly dealt with; but it has been found necessary to record the industry on the card only in those cases in which it is not such as might be inferred from the occupation. After the occupational details had been tabulated by the machines, the several industries were similarly dealt with. The results of this latter tabulation show the industries with which persons following a particular occupation were connected. The details for each combination of occupation and industry were copied on a slip, and by sorting and tabling these slips the numbers of persons of various ages for the different occupations in each industry were obtained.

The limitations of the old system of "ticking" were nowhere more severely felt than in dealing with occupations. The number of classified headings to be tabulated in relation to age and occupational status necessitated the use of an unusually large abstract sheet, which rendered the work of abstraction very laborious and increased the liability to error. It was considered, indeed, that no further extension of the particulars to be tabulated could be made with safety under the ticking system, and that the demands for additional details could only be met by the adoption of improved methods of tabulation. We have already referred to some of the additional detail appearing in the tables at this census, viz., the increased number of classified headings, and the industrial analysis. Some other new features may now be briefly indicated.

One of the most important questions in regard to occupations is the employment of young persons, and in order to afford the fullest possible information on this subject, we have tabulated the ages of males and females in each occupation by single years from 10 to 21. This has involved a considerable extension of the work, but in view of the representations made to us by other government departments and by public bodies, we believe it to be fully justified.

The marital condition of occupied persons is another subject on which we have been enabled by the mechanical system of tabulation to give fuller information than would have been possible under the old system. In 1901, unmarried women had, as already stated, for the first time, been distinguished in the occupation tables, but on the present occasion figures for married and for widowed women as well have been obtained. Married males are also now distinguished from the unmarried and widowed.

The numbers of persons carrying on trade or industry "at home" are now tabulated according to their occupational status, i.e., whether employer, working for employer, or working on own account, whereas formerly they were grouped under a single heading.

4. TABULAR RESULTS.

Such a large amount of additional information has been incorporated in the published tables that it was found to be impracticable to include them all in a single volume. It was therefore decided to issue in advance as a separate part (Vol. X., Part II., Cd. 7,019) the Table, No. 13, giving a condensed list of occupations of males and females at several ages in each Administrative County, each County Borough, each Urban District of which the population exceeded 50,000, and in the aggregate of the Rural Districts in each Administrative County. This table, which extends over 781 pages, is arranged on a uniform plan throughout, the minimum list of occupational headings being printed in ordinary type, and being supplemented by locally important sub-divisions of the fixed headings printed in italic type. The marital condition of females is also given, but not the age-distribution by condition. In the present volume the full list of occupational headings, with the numbers of males and females at quinquennial age-groups from 10 to 25 years and at decennial groups from 25 to 75 years, together with their occupational status, is given for England and Wales, London, Lancashire, and Yorkshire in Tables 3 to 6; a separate table for England and Wales shows similar particulars for married males (Table 7); while for unmarried, married, and widowed females the particulars are given separately in Tables 8 to 11, which relate to England and Wales, London, Lancashire, and Yorkshire, respectively. For the same areas the occupations of young persons at each year of age from 10 to 21 are given in Table 14. The full list of occupational headings, without ages, is given in Table 12 for Administrative Counties (with their associated County Boroughs), and a grouped list of occupations, much more condensed than that in Table 13, is given in Table 15 for all Administrative Counties, County Boroughs, Urban Districts containing over 5,000 population, and for the aggregate of the Rural Districts in each Administrative County. The occupations of children aged 10 to 14 years in England and Wales, Administrative Counties, County Boroughs, and other towns having populations exceeding 50,000 are given in Table 16.

In order to compile these published tables, it is necessary to record the results of the tabulation in a much more extended form; many of the particulars which it has been found impracticable to publish may be of interest to Local Authorities and others, and are available in manuscript records, copies of which can be furnished, at a nominal cost, under the provisions of section 9 of the Census Act. Thus, for instance, full particulars as published for England and Wales can be supplied for each Administrative County, County Borough, and other Urban District of over 50,000 population, and for the Urban or Rural aggregates in each county, and the full list of occupations—distinguishing married males, and unmarried, married, and widowed females, but without age-distribution—for all Urban Districts of 5,000 population or upwards.

5. ANALYSIS OF ORDERS AND SUB-ORDERS.

In the Report on the Census of 1901 (page 89) attention was directed to the fact that the numbers classed under any occupational heading at successive censuses are affected by

"(1) Changes in the method of classification at the Census Office;
"(2) Changes in the mode of filling up the schedules, and
"(3) Actual changes in the numbers of people following an occupation."

To these must now be added two further considerations, viz.:—

(4) Changes in the form of the schedule, and
(5) Changes in the method of tabulation.

A list of the changes of the first kind is set out in Table 25, where the headings adopted for the present census are compared with those adopted in 1901, and with a view to facilitating comparison of the numbers under the several headings, the figures for the four censuses 1881 to 1911 are given in Table 26.

As regards changes of the second kind, it has been the experience in the past that the schedules are more correctly filled up at each successive census, and the numbers included under indefinite occupational headings tend to be reduced by transfers to definite headings as the result of better information. The changes of the fourth and fifth kinds have also a similar effect. The addition to the schedule of a column for the industry or service with which the worker is connected, has, as already stated (page ix.), led to improvement in the occupational classification, and it is believed that the revision of the instructions on the schedule has also been of assistance. As regards the changes in the method of tabulation, the fact that the classification on this occasion was made direct from the schedules, instead of as formerly from copies made by the enumerators, has also contributed to more accurate results by the elimination of errors and omissions in the copying process.

In the course of the following remarks we shall draw attention to cases in which comparison of the numbers in definite occupations has been seriously affected by the improvement in the information furnished on the schedules, which has in some cases resulted in transfer from one definite heading to another, and in other cases in transfer from an indefinite to a definite heading. Some of the most conspicuous examples of indefinite headings under which the numbers have been reduced are as follows :—

——	Males.
	1901.	1911.
Salesmen, Buyers	1,913	1,205
Warehousemen	14,872	9,794
Contractors, Manufacturers, Managers, Superintendents, Foremen	6,646	3,208
General Labourers	409,773	295,343
Artizans, Mechanics, Apprentices	17,330	10,469
Factory Hands, Factory Labourers... ...	23,663	7,810
Machinists, Machine Workers	5,042	1,244

Another consideration to be borne in mind in drawing comparisons between the figures for 1901 and those for 1911 is the absence from England at the former census of an abnormally large number of men owing to the South African War and the consequent understatement of the numbers engaged in those occupations from which these men were temporarily withdrawn.

The question of output does not, of course, come within the purview of the population census, but it should not be overlooked that reduction in the numbers employed in any branch of industry may be due to the improvement or the extended use of machinery, and so may be quite compatible with increased production.

It should also be noted in comparing the numbers at given ages in an occupation that the age-constitution of the whole population changed appreciably between the two censuses, as will be seen from the following statement of the proportions per 1,000 at the several age-groups in the male and female population over 10 years of age :—

——	10–	15–	20–	25–	35–	45–	55–	65–	75 and upwards.
Males—
1901 ...	138	132	121	206	159	115	75	39	15
1911 ...	128	121	110	208	171	124	79	44	15
Females—
1901 ...	127	124	125	211	156	114	78	45	20
1911 ...	118	113	113	210	169	123	82	51	21

Comparisons of the numbers at successive censuses in any area, and especially in the Urban Districts, must be made with caution, owing (1) to the numerous changes of boundaries that have taken place from time to time, and (2) to the fact that the numbers represent persons residing in a particular area and not persons who are actually working in that area. As regards (1) no fewer than 44 new Urban Districts were created, and 112 out of the total of 1,137 were altered in area since 1901 ; these changes affected Rural Districts to a large extent, and, in the case of the 20 County Boroughs which were created or extended, reduced the areas of the Administrative Counties. As regards (2) it is inadvisable to compare the figures for London, for example, at different periods, without reference to the figures for the adjacent areas into which the population has overflowed. For these reasons we shall usually restrict our local comparisons to Administrative Counties, together with their associated County Boroughs. It has not been necessary on this occasion to tabulate occupation figures for Registration Counties, as the figures for Administrative Counties, which were tabulated for the first time in 1901, will be found more generally useful, and are now available in considering the intercensal variations of the several occupations in various parts of the country. In making such comparisons it will generally be convenient to show the absolute increase or decrease of the numbers in an occupation without reference to the rate of growth or decline of the populations in the areas under discussion. With a view to enabling this factor to be taken into account where desired, the figures for the several counties in the last intercensal period are appended.

I. General or Local Government of the Country.—The persons classified under the First Order as engaged in or in connexion with the General or Local Government of the Country numbered 299,599, of whom 248,624 were males and 50,975 females. Excluding 4,245 males and 6,093 females under the new heading "Post Office Telegraphists, Telephone Operators," which was previously included in "Telegraph, Telephone—Service" (Order VI.), there were 244,379 males and 44,882 females, compared with 171,687 males and 26,500 females in 1901, the figures showing an increase of 46·0 per cent. in the total, or 42·3 per cent. for males and 69·4 for females.

GENERAL GOVERNMENT.

Civil Service.—The numbers tabulated under the sub-order "National Government" were as follows :—

——	Persons.	Males.	Females.
1. Post Office—Telegraphists, Telephone Operators ...	10,338	4,245	6,093
2. Other Post Office Officers and Clerks	50,210	29,873	20,337
3. Postmen	47,401	46,333	1,068
4. Post Office Messengers, etc.	17,749	16,861	888
	125,698	97,312	28,386
5. Other Civil Service Officers and Clerks	33,037	31,340	1,697
6. Other Civil Service Messengers, etc.	13,617	12,162	1,455
	172,352	140,814	31,538

Post Office officials might be regarded as belonging more properly to Order VI. in their relation to the conveyance of messages and goods. As, however, they have always hitherto been treated as part of the Civil Service of the country, and as some of their duties are administrative in character, it is considered preferable to include the whole Post Office Service in Order I. The Post Office workers, who are for the first time shown separately, numbered 125,698 (97,312 males and 28,386 females), or nearly three-fourths of the total classified to the Civil Service—in the case of the females nine-tenths were in the Post Office. The figures exclude artizans and labourers, who were classed according to their trade, and part time Post Office workers who stated their ordinary occupation ; they do not, therefore, agree with those given by the Postmaster General in his 57th Annual Report, which shows the total number of persons in England and Wales employed wholly or in part in the Post Office on the 31st March, 1911, to have been 171,037 (133,783 males and 37,254 females). The total employed on the 31st March, 1901, as given in the 47th Annual Report, was 137,739 (109,679 males and 28,060 females), so that there would appear to have been an increase of 24·2 per cent. (22·0 per cent. for males and 32·8 per cent. for females) in the decennium.

The numbers of civil servants have shown continuous increase in recent years, and have doubtless been largely added to, as a result of recent legislation, since the date of the census. The increases between the censuses of 1881 and 1911 will be seen from the following table :—

TABLE II.—CIVIL SERVICE (EXCLUDING POST OFFICE TELEGRAPHISTS, TELEPHONE OPERATORS).

1911...	78,767	75,356	3,411

The numbers may be slightly affected for purposes of comparison by persons such as unestablished sub-postmasters, assistants, and auxiliaries only partly occupied in Post Office work having been returned differently at successive censuses, and some part of the increase among females as between 1901 and 1911 may be due to more wives and female relatives assisting sub-postmasters, etc., having been returned as occupied.

Of the 46,654 civil servants not employed by the Post Office, no fewer than 28,762, or 61·6 per cent., were resident in London or the adjoining counties.

Additional Workers in Government Employment.—In addition to the 140,814 males and 31,538 females who are classified in the occupation tables under the sub-order "National Government," no fewer than 74,296 males and 2,551 females employed in the service of the government are classified in the occupation tables under the various headings appropriate to the kind of work on which they were engaged. These additional workers were not performing administrative or clerical duties, but were mostly employed either in government manufacturing establishments or in the maintenance of government property. Details of their distribution by occupation, age, and locality will be found in the tables relating to industries or services on pages 590–1 and 842–3. Out of the total number, 40,577 males and 912 females are assigned in these tables to the particular kind of service, as well as to the occupation, in which they were engaged. Thus, for example, 16,262 males are shown as employed in government shipbuilding works, 14,058 in government engineering works, 3,417 in government harbour, dock, wharf, and lighthouse service, 2,049 in connexion with the manufacture of explosive substances and articles, and 1,942 in small arms factories. With regard to the remaining 33,719 males and 1,639 females, it is not possible to assign them definitely to separate undertakings; for example, many of them were Post Office employees engaged in the maintenance of telegraph and telephone apparatus, but these could not be separated from employees of other government establishments working in electrical fittings and apparatus, and a large number were labourers and artizans not returned as connected with any manufacturing establishment or special branch of government service. The occupational distribution of all the additional workers, whether assignable to a particular service or not, shows that there were among the males 17,350 classified to "General Engineering, and Machine Making" (including 6,907 erectors, fitters, turners, and their labourers, 2,958 boiler makers, and 2,012 blacksmiths, strikers), 14,595 to Ship and Boat Building (including 7,863 shipwrights, 2,239 ship platers, rivetters, etc. and 883 ship painters), 7,319 as "Electrical Apparatus Makers, Fitters, etc.," 3,298 as engaged in "Building and Works of Construction" (including 945 carpenters, joiners, and their labourers), 1,899 as "Explosive Substance, Explosive Article Makers," and 1,627 as "Gunsmiths, Gun Makers"; there were also 8,214 general labourers, 3,256 factory hands, labourers (undefined), and 2,553 artizans mechanics, apprentices (undefined). The additional female workers numbered 2,551, and included 800 tailoresses, 301 rope, canvas, sailcloth, etc. makers, and 324 sick nurses, invalid attendants.

The total number of persons employed in the service of the national government, excluding the army and navy, was 249,199, of whom 215,110 were males and 34,089 were females.

Local Government.

Police.—The police numbered 53,160, or 18·4 per cent. more than in 1901, when the number enumerated was 44,904. In 1911 there was one policeman to every 679 of the population, as against one to every 724 in 1901. The following table shows the number of police enumerated in 1901 and 1911, and their percentage of increase, compared with the general population, in London, in the metropolitan counties, and in all other counties where the police numbered upwards of 1,000 in 1911 :—

Durham	1,154	1,375	19·2	1,029	996
Glamorganshire	862	1,333	54·6*	998	841

* The great increase in the proportion of police in Glamorganshire was largely due to the presence, at the time of the census, of police drafted from other counties on account of industrial disturbances.

It will be seen that in only two of the counties—Hampshire and Cheshire—was there an increase in the proportion of population to policemen. Omitting Glamorganshire, for the reason stated above, the most striking decreases in the average population per policeman were in Staffordshire, where the very high proportion fell from 1,334 to 1,175, or by 11·9 per cent., and in London, where the very low proportion fell from 377 to 318, or by 15·6 per cent.; on the whole, the counties wholly or partly within the Metropolitan Police District have a smaller average population per policeman than any others.

Poor Law, Municipal, Parish and other Local or County Officers.—The heading "Municipal, Parish, and other Local or County Officers" in the occupational classification of previous censuses has at this census been divided so as to show separately the persons engaged in "Poor Law Service," of whom there were 30,861 (13,030 males and 17,831 females), as against 43,226 persons (41,620 males and 1,606 females) in the service of other local public bodies. The following table shows how the numbers engaged in municipal and poor law service have increased at recent successive censuses :—

	1881.	1891.	1901.	1911.	Increase per cent.
					1881 to 1891.	1891 to 1901.	1901 to 1911.
Persons	20,985	24,930	36,870	74,087	18·8	47·9	100·9
Males	17,968	19,765	26,444	54,650	10·0	33·8	106·7
Females	3,017	5,165	10,426	19,437	71·2	101·9	86·4

It should be mentioned that these figures include the administrative staff, and the office staff in municipal undertakings other than tramways and docks; they do not include artizans, labourers, and other workers for whom separate headings are provided in the classification. The increase is doubtless largely due to the development of the activities, industrial and otherwise, of public authorities, and the consequent demand for more clerical assistance, but part of it may be due to the better information contained on the schedule owing to the introduction of Column 11, which enabled it to be seen, for the first time, when a clerk engaged in gas, water, or electricity supply service was in the employ of a municipality.

Every county without exception contributed to the increase under this heading, the increase amounting to nearly 200 per cent. in Essex and Middlesex and to upwards of 100 per cent. in thirteen other counties.

Of the counties with populations exceeding 100,000, five only, viz. :—Wilts, Cornwall, Hereford, Salop, and Carnarvon, showed increases of less than 50 per cent.

In the absence of any official return showing for years previous to 1911 the total numbers engaged in poor law service, it is impossible to state precisely how much of the total increase is due to this branch of local government. Some indication may, however, be obtained from the number of resident officials and their families in workhouse establishments, as shown by the figures for these institutions at the censuses of 1901 and 1911, which are as follows :—

Enumerated in Workhouse Establishments.	Special Inmates (Paupers, Patients, etc.).			Officials and their Families.
	Persons.	Males.	Females.	Persons.	Males.	Females.
1901	208,650	120,285	88,365	14,701	3,704	10,997
1911	260,731	157,556	103,175	19,886	4,479	15,407
Increase per cent.	25·0	31·0	16·8	35·3	20·9	40·1

Additional Workers in the Employment of Local Authorities.—In connexion with the police forces, only 461 persons (183 males and 278 females), who are not classified under the heading in the occupation tables, are added as the result of the tabulation by "industry or service," and of this number 359 (104 males and 255 females) were engaged in domestic offices or in the provision of board and lodging.

To "Poor Law Service" 2,589 males and 103 females are added, bringing the total numbers up to 15,619 males and 17,934 females; the additional workers included 670 stationary engine—drivers, stokers, and firemen.

The total classified in the occupation tables under the heading of Municipal, Parish, and other Local or County Officers, not in the police or poor law services, does not take into account the very large number of workers who, while not concerned directly in the administration of local government, are employed in the various services under the control of the local authorities. By means of the tabulation of the "industry or service" it is found that the inclusion of this latter class raises the total of employees in the service of Local Authorities (other than police and poor law) to upwards of half a million, viz. :—343,539 males and 158,238 females. The largest contribution to the total of additional workers is furnished by those connected with education, who numbered 58,831 males and 133,371 females ; tramway services employed 35,490 males and 559 females ; institution service, 12,624 males and 18,292 females ; sanitary service, 26,815 males ; gas supply, 23,386 males ; harbour, dock, etc. service, 20,846 males ; water supply, 11,162 males ; electricity supply, 8,694 males ; libraries and museums, 2,184 males and 818 females ; baths and wash-houses, 1,638 males and 918 females ; and cemetery service, 2,015 males.

Some of the departments of Local Authorities' service are represented by headings in the occupation tables, but the above numbers of additional workers necessarily include all persons not classified under Local Government in the occupation tables who are employed in such departments, whether classified in the occupation table under the heading relating to the department—as, for example, "gas works service," "waterworks service," "electricity supply"—or under the personal occupation—as, for example, "engine drivers," "carmen." The numbers of persons classified in the occupation tables, under the headings representing the service in which they were engaged, included in hospital and institution service, 8,576 males and 13,607 females ; in drainage and sanitary service, 9,601 males ; in scavenging and disposal of refuse, 13,630 males ; in library, museum, etc. service, 2,015 males and 678 females ; in baths and wash-house service, 1,571 males and 897 females ; in harbour, dock, etc. service, 6,368 males ; in gas works service, 18,244 males ; in waterworks service, 6,546 males, and in electricity supply service, 7,752 males. In addition to workers assignable to particular branches of Local Authorities' service there is, as in the case of the National Government, a large residue of workers who cannot be assigned to any particular department of the service.

Aggregating the numbers employed in any capacity by all local authorities, it will be seen that the total reaches 588,951 persons, of whom 412,501 were males and 176,450 females, made up as follows :—

II. Defence of the Country.—The total number of males returned as "Officers or Men of the Army, Navy, or Marines," enumerated in England and Wales, was 205,817.

The number returned as officers of the army was 16,206, of whom 7,921 were classified as "retired," and the number returned as "soldiers and non-commissioned officers" was 104,231. It is probable, however, that the census figures include as "effective" some officers who should have been returned as "retired," as well as some soldiers who had left the army but were not following any occupation at the date of the census, for the numbers are in excess of those returned as on the regimental strength of the army in this country on the 30th September, 1911, as shown in the General Annual Report on the British Army for the year ending on that date. From the ordinary enumeration in the United Kingdom and from returns of the army abroad, furnished by the Military Authorities, it appears that the total strength of all ranks in active service at home and abroad at the date of the census was 264,041. This number shows a very large decrease from that returned in 1901 (which, however, was quite abnormal), and corresponds more nearly with the 222,859 returned ten years earlier. From the Report referred to above it appears that the occupations furnishing the largest numbers of recruits to the army were agricultural labourers, carmen, coal miners, domestic servants, shop assistants, clerks, porters, and builders' labourers. This fact is of importance in connexion with the age-distribution of some of the occupations.

The number of officers, men and boys of the navy enumerated in England and Wales was (exclusive of the 2,110 officers classified as "retired") 72,341; and of the officers and men of the marines (exclusive of 174 retired officers), 10,755. The total number in the navy and marines, whether at home or abroad, derived from returns which the Admiralty has enabled us to obtain, was 130,575, and shows an increase of more than 19 per cent. over the number returned in 1901, and of 96 per cent. over the total in 1891.

III. Professional Occupations and their Subordinate Services.—The Third Order, which relates to Professional Occupations and their Subordinate Services, has a total of 714,621 (367,578 males and 347,043 females), or 108,361 (55,960 males and 52,401 females) more than in 1901. Little value for statistical purposes can, however, be attached to the Order considered as a whole, having regard to the dissimilarity of the professional occupations which it comprises and to the fact that assistants and subordinates who would not ordinarily be regarded as professional persons are included. In addition to the assistants and subordinates classified in this Order, there were also the "additional workers" shown by the tabulation of industry or service from the particulars furnished in column 11 of the schedule. It is probable, however, that these particulars were returned less fully in the case of persons employed in connexion with professional services than in the case of those employed either by public bodies or in connexion with trade or industry, as the question appears to have been held by some people not to relate to the professions. The numbers and occupational distribution of these "additional workers" are given in detail in Tables 28 and 29, and will only be referred to in the following paragraphs when they have any special significance.

Clerical Profession.—Clergymen of the Established Church, including, for purposes of comparison, the 941 who in 1911 were classed as retired, declined from 25,235 in 1901 to 24,859 in 1911, or by 1·5 per cent. Comparison of the numbers at the different age-periods shows a considerable decrease at the ages 25-45, and a somewhat smaller increase at age-groups from 45 upwards. This alteration of the age-constitution necessarily results from the falling-off in the numbers entering the profession, the increased proportion at the higher ages representing the survivors of the more numerous entrants in previous years.

The following table gives the age-distribution of clergymen in 1901 and 1911 :—

Census Year.	Ages.
	Total.	20–	25–	35–	45–	55–	65–	75 and upwards.
1901...	25,235	273	4,833	6,286	5,273	4,146	2,943	1,481
1911...	24,859	291	3,785	5,476	6,123	4,625	2,975	1,584

Roman Catholic Priests, on the other hand, have increased from 2,849 to 3,302, or by 15·9 per cent., but nearly half of this increase is due to the greater number of foreign-born priests, who numbered only 277 in 1901, against 492 in 1911; the majority of the latter number came from France. Ministers and priests of other religious bodies increased by 3·5 per cent., their number being 11,981, against 11,572 in 1901. Taken together the figures for clergymen (including the retired), priests and ministers of all denominations, show a slight increase from 39,656 to 40,142, or 1·2 per cent., the rates of increase in the two previous decennia having been 9·9 and 8·4 per cent. respectively.

The relative number of clergymen of the Established Church, Roman Catholic priests, and ministers of other religious bodies varies greatly in different parts of the country. The following table shows the 13 English counties (including Monmouthshire) in which the second and third of these groups were together highest (in every case exceeding 56 per cent.) in proportion to the first group; and also the 14 English counties in which they were together lowest (in no case reaching 40 per cent.) in proportion to the first group :—

In all the Welsh counties, except Radnorshire, clergymen of the Established Church were out-numbered by other members of the clerical profession. The proportion of Roman Catholic priests was usually low, only exceeding 12 per cent. of the number of clergymen of the Established Church in Flintshire, where the proportion has increased from 26·4 per cent. in 1901 to 73·1 per cent. in 1911. The highest proportions of ministers of other religious bodies were 182·8 in Carmarthenshire, 183·1 in Merionethshire, and 224·0 in Glamorganshire.

Itinerant Preachers, Scripture Readers, and Mission Workers, taking males and females together, were 8·2 per cent. more numerous than in 1901, the numbers being 10,927, as against 10,096; taking the sexes separately, the males decreased from 5,293 to 4,972, or by 6·1 per cent., while the females increased from 4,803 to 5,955, or by 24·0 per cent.

As Monks, Nuns, Sisters of Charity, there were classified 7,857 persons (302 males and 7,555 females), an increase over the figures for 1901 (239 males and 6,219 females) of 21·7 per cent. in the total, or 26·4 per cent. for males and 21·5 per cent. for females. It should be observed that these increases are almost entirely accounted for by the arrival during the intercensal period of foreign-born monks and nuns. The number of nuns is no doubt understated owing to an apparent reluctance on the part of some of the heads of conventual establishments to give information on the schedule which would enable the inmates to be distinguished as members of the religious community; it appears that possibly they do not regard their vocation as coming under the description "profession or occupation." Many nuns also follow some occupation or profession such as teaching, and where this was stated they were classified to the occupation and not to the heading for nuns. The number so classified included 1,849 teachers, 859 as sick nurses or in other capacities in hospital and institution service, and 390 in other occupations. The total number of nuns is therefore raised by these additions to 10,653.

Church, Chapel, Cemetery—Officers, etc., numbered 8,585 (7,883 males and 702 females), which is a considerable increase on the 6,206 (5,721 males and 485 females) classed to the heading in 1901 ; but it is possible that a good deal of the increase in a heading such as this may be due to more definite return of occupation.

Legal Profession.—Barristers numbered 4,121 and Solicitors 17,259, or together 21,380, compared with 20,998 in 1901. While, however, the total has altered but little, there have been some remarkable changes in the numbers under the various age-groups, as will be seen from the following table :—

BARRISTERS AND SOLICITORS.

CENSUS YEAR.	TOTAL.	AGES.
		20–	25–	35–	45–	55–	65–	75 and upwards.
1901	20,998	693	5,441	6,562	4,623	2,247	1,087	345
1911	21,380	645	4,999	5,320	5,494	3,303	1,257	362

Here, as in the case of clergymen, a decline in the number of entrants to the profession is reflected in the decreased numbers at the earlier ages. The Law Clerks, who between 1891 and 1901 had increased by 25·0 per cent., have since increased by only 5·3 per cent., from 34,433 to 36,265. Among the males the increase was negligible, but the number of females advanced from 367 to 2,159. The following figures will show that the males declined at age-groups up to 35-, and that except at the first age-group, 10-15, the increase in the females more than counterbalanced the decline in the males ; at age-groups 35- and upwards the males increased considerably, the rate of increase being greater in each succeeding decennial age-group up to 65-75 :—

The additional workers returned as connected with the legal profession numbered 1,236 males and 590 females, of whom 1,035 males have been classified as "messengers," and 399 females as "caretakers." On the other hand, 373 males and 25 females classified under the occupational headings in the legal profession are shown in Table 28 to be connected with other industries or services.

Medical Profession.—The persons returned as Physicians, Surgeons, or Registered Practitioners numbered 23,469. Including the 1,579 classed as retired in 1911, in order to make the figures comparable with 1901, there were 25,048 (of whom 495 were women), against 22,698 (of whom 212 were women), the increase in the total being 10·4 per cent., against 19·2 per cent. in 1891-1901. The figures for the males under age-groups exhibit the same features as have been observed among clergymen and solicitors—considerable decrease in numbers at the earlier ages, and an increased proportion of those who had attained ages 45-55, as will be seen from the following table :—

PHYSICIANS, SURGEONS, REGISTERED PRACTITIONERS.

CENSUS YEAR.	TOTAL.	AGES OF MALES.
		20–	25–	35–	45–	55–	65–	75 and upwards

1911...	24,553	390	5,111	7,325	6,312	3,306	1,553	556

The industry tables show 4,132 males and 774 females as "additional workers" employed by medical practitioners. Of these, 686 males and 374 females were classified to subordinate medical service, 359 males and 119 females were clerks, 943 males were messengers, 1,008 were coachmen, grooms, and 741 were motor car drivers. Practitioners shown as engaged in hospital, institution, Local Authority, and other services numbered 2,546 males and 132 females.

Under the heading "Dentists (including assistants)" there were classified 7,674 persons (7,424 males and 250 females), as against 5,309 persons (5,169 males and 140 females) in 1901, which would indicate an increase of 44·5 per cent. Lack of precision in filling up the schedule may, however, affect the figures for purposes of comparison, as the returns at each census have included a number of assistants and apprentices who, had their description been more definite, would have been classified under the heading "Surgical and Dental Instrument and Apparatus Makers" in Order XI., along with artificial tooth makers, dental apparatus makers, and dental mechanics.

The persons classed as Veterinary Surgeons numbered 2,612, or 329 fewer than in 1901. The rate of decline, 11·2 per cent., which these figures show, is, however, understated, as at the time of the census of 1901 a number of men who ordinarily would have been employed at home were serving in South Africa. At ages under 35 the numbers given in the tables were nearly 40 per cent. less than in 1901, but above that age there was a slight increase, the age-distribution showing in a marked degree the effects of diminished rate of entry similar to those already noted in the case of the clerical, legal and medical professions. With increased substitution of mechanically driven for horse-drawn vehicles, it is probable that the numbers will be reduced very considerably, for in London, where the change in this respect was probably the greatest during the decennium, the number of veterinary surgeons fell by 31·8 per cent. The industry tables show that in the service of veterinary surgeons there were 354 blacksmiths and 389 horsekeepers, grooms, etc.

The number of Midwives, which had been 2,646 in 1881, and 3,055 in 1901, further rose to 6,602 in 1911. Doubtless many women who practised midwifery were formerly entered as nurses, but now, since they have a definite qualification and can only act if registered under the Midwives Act, 1902, are returned as midwives. Such transfer is also probably indicated by the apparent decline in the recorded numbers of married or widowed nurses, the unmarried showing a considerable increase. Thus, while the total females returned as sick nurses, invalid attendants, increased from 64,214 to 77,060, or 20·0 per cent., the married or widowed decreased from 27,357 to 22,857, or 16·4 per cent. Midwives and female sick nurses and invalid attendants together increased by 24·4 per cent., the increase among the unmarried being 48·6 per cent., while the married or widowed decreased by 5·6 per cent. Only 1,257 males were returned as sick nurses, against 1,092 in 1901.

If to these nurses and midwives there be added 41,639 women who were classified under "Hospital and Institution Service" in Order IV., 17,831 under "Poor Law Service," and 1,606 under "Municipal, Parish, and other Local or County Officers" in Order I., the aggregate amounts to 144,738, as against 104,036 in 1901, showing an increase of 39·1 per cent. Of the total number of "sick nurses, invalid attendants," 104 males and 20,318 females are shown by the industry tables to be in hospitals and institutions (not poor law).

Teaching Profession.—The number of School Masters and Mistresses, Teachers, Professors and Lecturers employed in education of all grades (exclusive of teachers of music, who are classed with musicians) was 251,968, of whom 183,298 were females. In 1901 the number was 230,345, of whom 171,670 were females; there has thus been an apparent increase of 17·0 per cent. among males and of 6·8 per cent. among females. It should be observed, however, that the figures are affected for comparison by the great change in the system of training teachers. Formerly a large proportion of the pupil teachers and probationers were part-time or whole-time teachers, and were accordingly classified to the heading "teacher"; now, however, intending teachers are mainly whole-time "students," and have been classified accordingly. In order to obtain a better measure of the increase in the teaching profession, the numbers at ages 20 years and upwards at the two censuses may be compared, and these show an increase of 30·4 per cent. among males and of 33·6 per cent. among females. The following table gives the age-constitution of male and female teachers at the two censuses, and shows how the numbers under 20 have been reduced by the change in methods of training. In both sexes the great falling-off in numbers which occurred at the age-group 35-45 in 1891, and at 45-55 in 1901, was deferred until 55-65 in 1911, and may be attributed to the great increase in the number of teachers during the period 1871-1881 resulting from the Elementary Education Act, 1870. The number at ages 15-25, which had been 45,393 in 1871, rose to 82,872 in 1881, and the survivors of this large number have affected the proportions aged 25-35, 35-45, and 45-55 respectively at the three following censuses.

The proportion of married women engaged in teaching in schools under Local Authorities averaged only 7·5 per cent. of the total female teachers in the whole of England and Wales; in London, however, the proportion reached 15·5 per cent.

An attempt has been made on this occasion to give separate figures for private teachers and for those in schools. The result, for which, however, no very great degree of accuracy can be claimed, is as follows.:—

——	Males.	Females.

The numbers of full-time teachers and student teachers on the staff of ordinary public elementary schools on the last day of the school years 1901 and 1911 are given by the Board of Education as follows :—

Year ended 31st July.	Certificated Teachers.		Other Recognised Full-time Teachers and Student Teachers.		Total.
	Males.	Females.	Males.	Females.	Males.	Females.
1901... ...	25,122	40,979	5,398	47,322	30,520	88,301
1911... ...	34,013	66,983	6,896	55,431	40,909	122,414

In addition to the above there were in 1901 pupil teachers and probationers to the number of 5,687 males and 25,296 females, which numbers will give some idea of the transfer at the earlier ages from the heading "teachers" to that of "students."

At the census of 1871, which practically coincided with the introduction of compulsory elementary education, there were on the average 67 persons living at ages from 3 to 20 years to every teacher enumerated. At successive censuses since there have been respectively 58, 56, 50, and 48.

The industry tables show, as far as the returns will admit, separate totals for "Government," "Local Authority," and "Other" teaching service. Taken in the aggregate, there were 14,092 male and 24,968 female additional workers, of whom 1,361 males and 15,712 females were domestic indoor servants, 2,382 males and 460 females were in "college service," 6,350 males and 3,954 females were caretakers, and 2,867 females were charwomen. Music masters and mistresses, who were classed to the heading "Musicians, etc.," and not to teaching, numbered 187 males and 939 females.

Literary, Scientific and Political.—Under this heading are included 12,030 males and 1,756 females who were classed as "Authors, Editors, Journalists, Reporters"; 6,246 males and 145 females as "engaged in Scientific Pursuits"; and 7,223 males and 3,788 females as "Others connected with Literature, etc." (including political society service). There has been an increase since 1901 among the authors, etc., amounting to 22·6 per cent. for males and 40·6 per cent. for females, nearly all of which has occurred at ages above 35 years; about one-half of the males and two-thirds of the females were enumerated in London or the adjoining counties.

The "persons engaged in scientific pursuits" were apparently almost double the number so classified in 1901; but no comparison is possible in the case of "Others connected with Literature, etc.," which is a very indefinite class and is affected by alterations of classification. Of the 25,499 males in this sub-order, 9,262 were returned as connected with some industry or service; the greater part of these were editors and journalists in newspaper service, who numbered 4,900 males and 137 females.

Engineers and Surveyors.—The Civil and Mining Engineers numbered 7,208, and the Land, House, or Ship Surveyors, 4,029. These numbers are considerably below those shown for 1901, but comparison cannot fairly be made owing to the number of cases in which the additional information now given for the first time in the "industry" column of the schedules has enabled many of the mining engineers to be more properly classified with other officials to the headings for "Mine and Quarry Owners, Agents, Managers." Better information has also shown a number of "Surveyors" to be "Auctioneers, House-agents and Surveyors," and they have accordingly been classed as auctioneers in Order V. There has also been introduced a separate heading for "Professional Engineers', Professional Surveyors'—Assistants."

The industry tables show that 432 civil or mining engineers and 413 surveyors were returned in various industries; 163 of the former were employed in connexion with "Works of Construction" (XII. 2), and 143 of the latter in connexion with House Building, etc. (XII. 1). There were 1,603 male and 260 female clerks returned as employed by engineers and surveyors.

Art, Music, Drama.—The numbers included in this sub-order rose from 102,305 in 1901 to 125,006 in 1911, being an increase of 22·2 per cent.; among males the rate of increase was rather greater than among females—22·9 and 21·0 per cent. respectively. "Painters, Sculptors, and Artists" numbered 11,619; and "Engravers," classed along with them in 1901, 5,110. "Engravers" (with their assistants) are now shown separately owing to the increase in the number of photographic engravers, etchers, etc., and the consequent impossibility of distinguishing between those who might be entitled to the designation "artist" and others engaged in these processes. Putting the two headings together, the numbers appear to have increased from 13,949 to 16,729, but the real increase is probably greater than this on account of the inclusion in the former number of many persons who were classified to this heading because they were returned too indefinitely to allow of their being properly classified according to the industrial nature of their occupation. The persons tabulated as architects have decreased from 10,781 in 1901 to 8,921 in 1911, but the decline is accounted for by the transfer of draughtsmen and other assistants to the heading "Art, Music, Theatre—Service." The assistants referred to are shown by the industry tables to have numbered 2,215 males and 9 females; the total numbers engaged in architects' businesses were 11,969 males and 177 females, the additional workers including 857 male and 132 female clerks.

The number of "Photographers" increased from 14,999 to 16,915, of which numbers 3,851 and 5,016 respectively were females; the proportion of that sex has therefore risen from 25·7 to 29·7 per cent., and the increase for both sexes engaged in this profession was fairly general throughout the country, but the number of males decreased considerably in London and in Hertfordshire.

" Musicians, Music Masters, and Singers " rose from 43,249 in 1901 to 47,116 in 1911, the increase being at the rate of 10·9 per cent. among males, and only 7·2 per cent. among females ; in the former sex there was an actual decrease of over 900 below 35 years of age, and in the latter of over 1,200 below 25 years of age, while above these ages the numbers increased by about 3,200 and 2,800 respectively. The number of foreigners under this heading declined from 2,440 to 2,228. Actors increased from 6,044 to 9,076, and actresses from 6,443 to 9,171, the rate of increase for the two sexes together being 46·1 per cent. in 1901-1911, against 70·6 per cent. in 1891-1901. In the subordinate services connected with art, music, and theatres the numbers shown in the tables have risen from 6,840 to 17,078, a good proportion of this large increase being due to the introduction and development of " picture palaces " ; the increase under this heading is understated owing to the transfer of " organ grinders " to Order XXII., the number of Italians in art service being, mainly in consequence of the transfer, reduced from 1,348 in 1901 to 42 in 1911. " Exhibitions, Games, etc. Service " includes the performers, showmen, and other persons (except actors and musicians) engaged in exhibitions and music halls, persons engaged in racecourse service, sports ground service, and professionals and attendants in various games. In 1901 the numbers were 12,516 males and 948 females, and they rose in 1911 to 28,194 males and 4,021 females.

By means of the tabulation of industry or service an attempt has been made to show separately the numbers engaged in (1) theatres, (2) music halls and variety theatres, and (3) picture theatres. The total numbers employed in theatres were 14,989 males and 9,312 females ; of these, 5,863 males and 6,726 females were classed as " Actors," and 5,295 males and 1,709 females under the heading " Art, Music, Theatre—Service." The additional workers, classed under other headings in the occupation tables, included musicians (2,219 males and 201 females) ; carpenters (748 males) ; electrical fitters, electricians (361 males) ; charwomen (330 females) ; and barmaids (234 females). The total numbers employed in music halls were 6,497 males and 3,271 females ; 3,213 males and 2,445 females classed as " Actors " were definitely returned as being engaged in music halls, those who failed to state whether in theatres or music halls being classed under the former. Musicians comprised 1,194 males and 182 females out of the total of 1,567 male and 393 female " additional workers " in music halls.

In picture theatres the total numbers were 4,301 males and 905 females, of whom 582 males and 234 females were " additional workers " ; among these are included the musicians, who numbered 319 males and 141 females.

IV. Domestic and other allied Services.—The number of persons classified in this Order was 2,121,717, of whom 387,677 were males and 1,734,040 females. These numbers include persons engaged in (1) domestic indoor service, whether in private families, in business establishments, or in hotels, lodging houses, etc., (2) domestic outdoor service, and (3) other allied services. The constitution of the Order is not precisely the same as in 1901 ; waiters in boarding houses and in colleges were then classed to the heading " Domestic Indoor Servants in Hotels, etc.," but in 1911 only resident waiters were so classed, the non-resident being classed under the heading " Waiters (not Domestic) " in Order XX., as were also Club waiters, who in 1901 were included under the heading " College, Club—Service." Moreover, non-resident domestics in hotel, lodging house, eating house, and catering service have been more completely separated at this census from the resident domestics, and this involves a further transfer from this Order to Order XX.

Apart from such differences, which affect the total for the Order, there are some internal changes which must be taken into account in comparing the figures for the several headings with those for the preceding census. The first sub-order contains the same headings as previously, and distinguishes domestic indoor servants in hotels, etc., from those in other service, but the number under the former heading has been reduced, as compared with 1901, for the reason stated above, and the number in other service also has been affected by the introduction, into the third sub-order, of a new heading for " Day Girls, Day Servants," most of whom would, at the earlier census, have been classified as " Domestic Indoor Servants." The totals in 1901 and 1911 for the three sub-orders, including " Day Girls, Day Servants " in the first sub-order for comparison, were as follows :—

	1901.			1911.			Increase per cent.
	Persons.	Males.	Females.	Persons.	Males.	Females.	Persons.
1. Domestic Indoor Service (including Day Girls).	1,394,929	64,146	1,330,783	1,413,619	54,260	1,359,359	1·3
2. Domestic Outdoor Service	179,968	179,932	36	226,370	226,266	104	25·8
3. Other Service	420,020	60,117	359,903	481,728	107,151	374,577	14·7
Total	1,994,917	304,195	1,690,722	2,121,717	387,677	1,734,040	6·4

The number of Domestic Indoor Servants has thus increased at a much lower rate since 1901 than has the general population, for the changes in classification cannot account for more than a small fraction of the difference between the two rates. Accurate comparison with the preceding decennium is not possible owing to a radical difference of treatment, in 1891, of daughters and other female relatives who were returned by the head of the family as assisting in household duties. At that census they were for the first and only time reckoned as in domestic service, and the rate of increase for female domestic indoor servants, which had been as low as 1·9 per cent. in 1871-1881, was returned as 12·7 per cent. for 1881-1891, and was followed by a decrease of 4·0 per cent. in 1901 from the inflated number included at the previous census. Excluding the 1891 figures from the comparison, it appears that the total increase in the twenty years 1881-1901 was 8·2 per cent., and, assuming an equal rate throughout the whole time equivalent to a decennial rate of 4 per cent., it was greater than in either 1871-1881, or in 1901-1911, though in the former period the recorded rate of increase is less than the true rate owing to the inclusion of the " retired " in the total for 1871. The rate of increase for male domestic indoor servants was 4·0 per cent. in 1881-1891, and 9·6 per cent. in 1891-1901, but the latter rate is overstated on account of changes in classification in 1901, involving the transfer to this heading of some hotel servants who had previously been included in Order XX. In the present returns a further change of classification has been found to be desirable, and, as is shown on the preceding page, is mainly in the opposite direction, causing a transfer from the domestic to hotel, etc. service; the decrease, equal to 15·4 per cent., recorded in the above table, may, therefore, be regarded as due more to these changes than to a great falling-off in the number of male indoor servants.

The average number of persons per family had declined from 4·62 in 1901 to 4·51 in 1911, and it was, therefore, to be anticipated that on this account the proportion of servants per 1,000 families would have tended to decrease. The following figures show that not only is this the case, but that there has also been an appreciable decrease per 1,000 population :—

	1881.	1901.	1911.
Families or Separate Occupiers	5,633,192	7,036,868	8,005,290
Population	25,974,439	32,527,843	36,070,492

Female Domestic Indoor Servants per 1,000 Families ...	218	189	170

It was shown in the Report on the Census of 1901 that an examination of the age-distribution of female domestic indoor servants as returned in 1881 and 1901 suggested a disinclination on the part of young women for domestic service, and the continuation of this tendency is clearly demonstrated in the following table, in which " Day Girls, Day Servants " are included, for purposes of comparison, in the figures for 1911.

The very large reduction in the proportion at the youngest age-group shown in the table is undoubtedly due mainly to the general raising of the age at which children leave school. But the limitation of juvenile employment from this cause does not appear to have affected to any appreciable extent the total number occupied at the age 14-15, and the decline of 17·2 per cent. shown in the table must, therefore, be attributed to a preference at this age for other forms of occupation rather than to a prolongation of school life. At ages 20-25 there has been a fall of 1·7 per cent. in the numbers between 1901 and 1911, and the total decline at all ages up to 25 has amounted to 34,578, or 4·2 per cent. ; while above 25 years there has been an increase at each age-period in the table, reaching a maximum of 22·9 per cent. at 45-55, and amounting altogether to 63,154, or 12·2 per cent.

The increase in the number of female domestic indoor servants between 1901 and 1911 in the aggregate of all the rural districts was at the rate of 5·5 per cent., while in all urban districts it was only 1·0 per cent., in spite of some transfer of area from rural to urban districts during the intercensal period, for which no correction has been made in the number of servants. Taking the number of servants in proportion to population, it is found that, while in the urban districts it showed a distinct fall from 39 to 36 per 1,000, it was practically stationary at 45 per 1,000 in the rural districts. Some part of the decline in the urban area is doubtless attributable to the fact that there was during the intercensal period a considerable development of residential suburbs in rural parishes. A further explanation may also be found in the greater opportunity for industrial employment in the towns, which is probably the principal cause of the disparity between the rates for the two classes of area at the age-groups 15-20 and 20-25, as shown in the following table :—

In Table 15B is given a column showing the proportion of domestic indoor servants (exclusive of those in hotels, etc., and of day girls, day servants) to families or separate occupiers in each Administrative County, in each County Borough, in each Urban District of over 5,000 population, and in the aggregate of the Rural Districts in each county.

The Administrative Counties in which the proportions of servants were lowest were mostly industrial or mining, while those with the highest proportions were mostly residential counties, but there were some exceptions, as will be seen from the following list :—

Among the County Boroughs and other towns of over 50,000 population the proportions varied more widely than in the Administrative Counties ; there were less than 100 servants per 1,000 families in 41 of these towns, the lowest proportions being 38 in Aston Manor, 45 in Burnley, 49 in Rochdale, 51 in Blackburn and in Oldham, 57 in Preston, 59 in Smethwick and in Dewsbury, and 60 in Bolton and in Bury, while in 9 of the large towns the proportions were not less than 300 per 1,000, viz. :—300 in Oxford, 304 in Hastings, 305 in Southport, 307 in Bath, 335 in Hornsey, 358 in Wimbledon, 403 in Ealing, 408 in Eastbourne, and 415 in Bournemouth. Among the Metropolitan Boroughs the extremes ranged from 35 in Bethnal Green, 39 in Shoreditch, 42 in Bermondsey, 50 in Finsbury, 51 in Southwark, 54 in Poplar, and 64 in Stepney, to 408 in Paddington, 483 in St. Marylebone, 544 in Chelsea, 545 in the City of Westminster, 707 in Kensington, and 737 in Hampstead. Among the smaller towns shown in Table 15B, exceptionally low proportions were recorded in many of those in Lancashire and the West Riding of Yorkshire. For example, Chadderton, Church, Little Lever, Oswaldtwistle, and Nelson in the former county, and Haworth and Marsden in the latter county, all had proportions of less than 30 per 1,000. On the other hand, proportions of 500 or more per 1,000 were recorded in Foots Cray (500), Esher and the Dittons (501), Beckenham (508), Hoylake and West Kirby (523), Surbiton (535), Walton upon Thames (536), Frimley (540), Ruislip Northwood (542), Chislehurst (554), Hove (568), Great Crosby (628), and Weybridge (630). Altogether there were 62 districts with proportions of less than 50 per 1,000, and of these 55 were in Lancashire, Yorkshire (West Riding), or Cheshire ; while of the 16 districts with proportions of not less than 500 per 1,000, 12 were in London or the adjoining counties.

In these comparisons some allowance should be made on account of the exclusion of " day girls, day servants," who are more largely employed by private families in some localities than in others, and also on account of the inclusion of domestic servants employed in business establishments for attendance upon the commercial staff ; doubtless, too, paid domestic assistance is customarily regarded in some parts of the country as a greater luxury than in other parts.

In Domestic Outdoor Service there were 226,370 persons, of whom 104 were females. The males were classified as follows in 1911, the numbers under the corresponding headings in 1901, except in the case of motor car drivers, who were not previously distinguished, being given for comparison :—

	1901.	1911.
Domestic Coachmen, Grooms	75,355	67,228
Domestic Motor Car—Drivers, Attendants	—	23,151
Domestic Gardeners	87,900	118,739
Gamekeepers	16,677	17,148

The decrease recorded for domestic coachmen and grooms would appear to be unduly low (10·8 per cent.), compared with that recorded for non-domestic coachmen, etc. (33·6 per cent.), and suggests that there has been some transfer—probably owing to better returns at the later census—from the non-domestic to the domestic heading. The total number of motor vehicle drivers, whether in domestic service or not, was only 623 in 1901, but had risen in 1911 to 45,943, of whom 23,151 were classified as domestic ; it is very probable, however, that the latter number is somewhat understated owing to the fact that only drivers stated to be in domestic service have been tabulated under this heading (see also page xl.). The number of motor car licences issued during the year ending 31st March, 1911, was 95,015 (including hackney motors)—see Fourth Report of the Commissioners of Customs and Excise (Cd. 6,993) ; the number of cars used for trade or professional purposes is not given separately, but even after making allowances for the number of private cars driven and attended to by their owners, and for the vehicles licensed during the year but not in use at the date of the census, it would appear that the total number of paid drivers shown in the returns may be somewhat deficient. It is probable that the whole of any such deficiency might be attributed to some drivers returning themselves as motor car mechanics, and consequently being included under the heading for that occupation in Order X.

With regard to the number of males returned as " Domestic Gardeners," it is probable that a growing interest in gardening has led to some increase in the domestic employment of gardeners, but the recorded increase (35 per cent.) is too great to be attributable wholly to this cause, and is doubtless partly due to omissions, on account of faulty returns, from the number classified under this heading in 1901. The following comparison of domestic and non-domestic gardeners in urban districts and rural districts respectively shows how disproportionately the numbers were returned at the two censuses :—

	All Urban Districts.*			All Rural Districts.*
	1901.	1911.	Increase per cent.	1901.	1911.	Increase per cent.
Domestic Gardeners ...	38,347	47,404	23·6	49,553	71,335	44·0
Nurserymen, Seedsmen, Florists, Market Gardeners and other non-domestic Gardeners	69,711	82,097	17·8	53,414	58,006	8·6
Total ...	108,058	129,501	19·8	102,967	129,341	25·6

* The figures for 1901 are not corrected for transfers of rural to urban areas during the intercensal period, and the increases in the urban districts are therefore somewhat overstated.

Had the proportions of domestic and non-domestic gardeners returned in 1901 been the same as in 1911, there would have been about 1,200 more domestic gardeners in the urban districts, and about 7,250 more in the rural districts, and the ratio of increase would have been only about 20 per cent. and 26 per cent. respectively.

The number of gamekeepers returned in 1911 was 17,148, and showed an increase of 2·8 per cent. over the number returned in 1901. The numbers returned at the censuses of 1881, 1891, and 1901 were 12,633, 13,817, and 16,677 respectively. These numbers are not comparable with the 1911 total owing to a change of classification, and the actual is somewhat greater than the recorded increase.

The total number of licences issued in respect of male servants during the year ending 31st March, 1911, was 219,341 (see Report of Commissioners of Customs and Excise), against 188,897 in 1900-1.

Analysis of the number of domestic servants not in private employment shows that such servants as were classed in the occupation tables under the heading "Domestic Indoor Servants in Hotels, Lodging Houses, and Eating Houses," numbering 12,226 males and 63,368 females, were found to be distributed as follows :—

	Males.	Females.
In Coffee and Eating Houses	382	2,290
In Lodging and Boarding Houses	4,626	28,989
In Hotels (including Railway Hotel and Catering Service) ...	5,317	15,421
In Clubs	424	2,275
In Residential Schools, Colleges, etc.	1,283	13,546
Undefined	194	847

All other domestic indoor servants, whether in private employment or not, are classed in the occupation tables as "Other Domestic Indoor Servants." This heading includes a number of servants employed in premises which are partly used as shops or other places of business. If the assistants live in or sleep in a lodging house belonging to the business the question arises whether the servants should be regarded as in private employment or not. As it was impossible in many cases to know whether a servant would be employed if there were no assistants, the rule was adopted that in all cases where there were domestics and trade assistants, and the employer and his family were non-resident, or where the number of trade assistants was in excess of the number in the family, the domestic servants were regarded as not in private employment. The number of "other domestic indoor servants" who were assumed not to be in private employment amounted to 463 males and 12,164 females. These included 78 males and 2,166 females in small private schools, where they were in attendance upon the proprietors and boarders. The majority of the remainder were in business establishments, the largest numbers being returned as employed by drapers (194 males and 5,365 females) and by publicans (2,055 females).

These deductions leave 41,571 males and 1,259,826 females classified as "Other Domestic Indoor Servants" who may be presumed to be in private employment, but it is improbable that in all these cases the work of the servants is entirely unconnected with the business of the employers. For example, it has been ascertained that 1,396 male and 70,078 female domestic indoor servants were employed in farm houses, and it is quite likely that many of these would not be wholly engaged in domestic duties.

In the third sub-order, "Other Service," the numbers under the several headings, excluding "Day Girls, Day Servants," were as follows :—

	1901.			1911.
	Persons.	Males.	Females.	Persons.	Males.	Females.

Others engaged in Service ...				32,924	29,816	3,108

Under the heading " College, Club—Service," which excludes ordinary domestic servants, cooks, and bar attendants at clubs, there was an increase of 72·3 per cent., notwithstanding the transfer to Order XX. of club waiters, who are shown by the tabulation of industry or service to have numbered 2,197 males and 379 females in 1911. It is probable, however, that there has, on the other hand, been a transfer to this heading on account of the more complete information furnished at this census, mainly through the introduction of the additional column on the schedule for industry or service (column 11). In most cases the distinction could be made between College Service and Club Service, 2,382 males and 460 females being classified under the former, and 8,723 males and 2,841 females under the latter, leaving an unclassified remainder of only 102 males and 46 females. College Service is included in the industry tables with Teaching and Education Service. The total numbers engaged in Club Service are shown by the industry tables (where they will be found under Order XX. with others engaged in the provision of board, lodging, etc.) to amount to 12,974 males and 6,011 females; the workers in this service include, in addition to the 8,723 males and 2,841 females classified to College, Club—Service in the occupation tables, waiters (2,197 males and 379 females), domestic indoor servants (424 males and 2,275 females), cooks (363 males and 288 females), and billiard markers and others in games, etc. service (698 males).

The heading " Hospital, Institution (not Poor Law), and Benevolent Society Service" (which excludes doctors, sick nurses, schoolmasters, mechanics, and the private servants of officials), showed an increase of 63·3 per cent. for males and 58·1 per cent. for females. Changes in classification may be disregarded, but there is little doubt that better returns have contributed to the apparent increase. Between 1891 and 1901 there had been a rise of 53·2 per cent. for males and 69·9 per cent. for females, and these high rates had followed increases of 62·8 per cent. and 34·5 per cent. respectively in the preceding intercensal period. Exclusive of Poor Law Service, the total number of persons employed in Institution Service, as shown by the industry tables, was 89,965 (26,225 males and 63,740 females), these figures comprising, in addition to the numbers so classified in the occupation tables, sick nurses, invalid attendants, etc. (104 males and 20,384 females), physicians, surgeons, etc. (1,496 males), schoolmasters and teachers (852 males and 1,061 females), engine drivers, stokers, firemen (1,045 males), gardeners, etc. (793), carpenters, joiners, and their labourers (410), painters, decorators (362), and " others in building or works of construction " (481). Of the total number, 404 males and 523 females were employed in institutions belonging to the National Government, and 12,624 males and 18,292 females in institutions belonging to Local Authorities (not poor law).

The number of " Caretakers, Office Keepers " and " Park, Lodge, Gate, etc.—Keepers" (who were shown under one heading in 1901) totalled to 42,201; the males increased in the ten years from 17,290 to 23,568, or by 36·3 per cent., and the females from 13,314 to 18,633, or by 40·0 per cent. In London, which contained more than a quarter of the whole number, the increase was only 16·0 per cent. for males and 21·0 per cent. for females. The age-distribution under these headings shows that young persons are not employed to any extent in these occupations, 62·2 per cent. of the males and 63·1 per cent. of the females being upwards of 45 years of age, and 87·0 and 85·4 per cent. of each sex respectively upwards of 35 years. The total number of " Park, Lodge, Gate, etc.—Keepers " was 2,300 (1,897 males and 403 females), and of " Caretakers, Office Keepers," 39,901 (21,671 males and 18,230 females). Of the number in the latter occupation, 14,860 of the males and 9,704 of the females are shown under various headings in the industry table; thus 6,350 males and 3,954 females were employed in schools, 3,120 males and 2,220 females in church, chapel, and cemetery service; altogether there were 6,069 male and 3,003 female caretakers in the service of Local Authorities. In the last-named service were found 1,232 of the 1,244 male " Park, Lodge, Gate, etc.—Keepers," who are shown as additional workers in the industry table.

" Cooks (not domestic) " include cooks in hotels, restaurants, coffee and eating houses, and clubs, and also the increasing number of non-resident cooks in private houses, lodging houses, boarding houses, and business establishments. The numbers given above show an increase of 49·8 per cent. for males and of 57·1 per cent. for females compared with 1901, but some part of the apparent increase must be attributed to the more complete separation of the non-resident cooks from " Domestic Indoor Servants." Examination of the age-distribution of non-domestic cooks shows that of the males only 41·1 per cent. were above 35, while of the females 60·4 per cent. were of corresponding ages, and that, notwithstanding the high rate of increase during the intercensal period, the proportion over 35 years in each sex was higher than at the preceding census. The principal industries with which these cooks were connected were hotel service, which employed 3,979 males and 2,900 females, and coffee house, eating house service, 3,233 males and 3,250 females.

Charwomen numbered 126,061, an increase of 12·7 per cent. upon the number enumerated in 1901, against an increase of only 6·7 per cent. between 1891 and 1901. The unmarried women so employed increased from 25,378 in 1901 to 26,900 in 1911, or by only 6·0 per cent., while the married or widowed increased from 86,463 to 99,161, or by 14·7 per cent., the number of widows at the latter census being 61,720, or nearly half the total. A comparison of the numbers at the various ages shows that the increase is confined to women over 35 years of age, but there is no doubt that some who are now included under the heading "Day Girls, Day Servants," were returned in 1901 in such a way as to lead to their inclusion under the heading "Charwomen." The following table shows the age-distribution at the two censuses :—

At ages over 70 the provision of Old Age Pensions has probably effected a reduction in the number of persons returned under the heading, and the increase shown at some of the other age-periods may have some relation to the decline among laundry workers referred to in the following paragraphs. From the industry tables it will be seen that of the 126,061 charwomen, 10,548 were returned as connected with various industries or services ; this number included 2,901 employed by Local Authorities (1,702 being employed in schools), 1,165 in schools other than those under Local Authorities, 697 in railway companies' service, 598 in church, chapel, etc. service, 330 in theatres, and 234 in banks.

"Laundry Workers ; Washers, Ironers, Manglers, etc.," form by far the most numerous class in the sub-order. They numbered 179,516 (12,464 males and 167,052 females), compared with 205,015 (8,874 males and 196,141 females) in 1901 ; thus the males increased by 40·5 per cent., while the females declined by 14·8 per cent., and the net decline in the total was equal to 12·4 per cent. A small addition to the 1911 figures is required to make the totals exactly comparable, but is not large enough to affect the rates appreciably ; this addition consists of the 157 males and 1,660 females who were shown by the industry tabulation to be employed in laundry receiving shops, etc.

The striking decline in the number of women workers and the displacement of female by male labour are associated with the reduction in the numbers working in small hand laundries, in the houses of private employers, or in their own homes, which has resulted from improved organisation of laundries and the extended use of machinery. The 1901 occupation tables showed that 22,404 of the 86,474 unmarried workers and 50,642 of the 109,667 married or widowed were returned as "working at home," while in 1911 only 17,425 of the 86,518 unmarried and 30,964 of the 80,534 married or widowed workers were so returned. These figures indicate a great reduction in the numbers directly employed by private families, and the following figures for the aggregate of the rural districts, where the bulk of the workers are probably in private employ, show this very clearly :—

	1901.	1911.
Unmarried Females	15,651	13,436
Married or Widowed Females	22,672	14,803
Total	38,323	28,239

An attempt was made to distinguish workers in private employ from those in laundries, but it was found impossible in many cases to ascertain from the returns whether washers, ironers, etc., were employed in laundries or not. The Home Office returns (Cd. 3,323, 5,398, and 5,883) show the following increases in the number of laundry workers :—

Persons Employed in Laundries.

	With Power.	Without Power.
1901	52,427	28,864
1904	62,626	30,203
1907	73,441	27,426

Later figures are not available, but those for the three years mentioned, taken in conjunction with the details of age and marital condition given below, leave no doubt that it is among washerwomen in private employ, rather than among female laundry workers, that the decline has taken place.

The reports of the Home Office Inspectors indicate from time to time how legislation and the development of laundry work as an organised industry have affected the workers. Thus, for example, on page 124 of the report for 1908 (Cd. 4,664) it is stated that " the disappearance of many of the smaller laundries seems more or less inevitable. . . . With the small laundry will go many of the worst features of the trade ; but will go also the small weekly wage of many a hardworking old woman who has kept herself off the parish or supported a sick husband by work in the smaller hand laundries " ; and again, on page 113 of the report for 1910 (Cd. 5,693) : " Several large laundries gave up employing young persons when the Act of 1907 * made certificates of fitness obligatory, but they have recently reverted to their former system, finding it impossible otherwise to get sufficient skilled workers."

The industry tables show that in addition to the persons classified under this heading in the occupation tables there were enumerated in connexion with laundry and washing service 9,956 males and 4,005 females. These numbers included carmen, motor van, etc. drivers (5,149 males), van guards, van boys (839 males), commercial clerks (464 males and 2,008 females), receiving shop, receiving office—keepers, assistants (157 males and 1,660 females), drivers and stokers of stationary and messengers, porters, watchmen (1,034 males). On the other hand, 202 male and 1,681 female laundry workers, etc., are shown in the industry tables as being connected with some other industry or service.

Bath and Wash-house service employed 2,366 males and 1,199 females, of whom 1,638 males and 918 females were working for Local Authorities. This heading was in 1901 not separated from "others engaged in service," and comparison of the total under the two present headings with the corresponding heading for 1901 shows that the numbers rose from 9,635 males and 1,971 females to 32,182 males and 4,307 females. The figures for 1911 are, however, inflated by the inclusion of a large number, mostly non-resident males, who in 1901 would have been included under the heading "Other Domestic Indoor Servants." They also include a considerable number of workers engaged, as mess-room attendants or otherwise, in the preparation and distribution of food to employees in business houses, such attendants having previously been assumed, in the absence of definite information, to be connected with catering businesses. In the case of males there has been a great addition to the number of window cleaners, door porters, lift attendants, lavatory attendants, etc., who are not classified as "Domestic Indoor Servants."

V. Commercial Occupations.—Under the Fifth Order there were enumerated 790,163 persons, of whom 663,316 were males and 126,847 females. "Merchants" are classed to this Order only when they are described simply by the country with which they trade, or when the commodities in which they deal are unspecified, and "Salesmen and Buyers" only when they are so indefinitely returned that they cannot be classified to any of the Orders IX. to XXII. in accordance with the nature of their business. Excluding the numbers under these two indefinite headings, the increase in this Order was from 583,016 to 783,223, or at the rate of 34·3 per cent., the males having risen from 523,639 to 656,617, or by 25·4 per cent., and the females from 59,377 to 126,606, or by 113·2 per cent.; the comparative increases between 1891 and 1901 were 44·6 per cent. for persons, 36·6 per cent. for males and 200·2 for females.

Merchants, Agents, Accountants.—All the seven headings in the first sub-order are somewhat unsatisfactory—"Merchants" and "Salesmen and Buyers" for the reasons stated above; "Brokers, Agents, Factors" and "Commercial Travellers" because they include a number of canvassers and travellers who, if full information were available, would be classed to the heading for "Hawkers" (Order XXII.) —the term "traveller" being largely used by market, street, and door-to-door sellers and tallymen to describe their occupations. The "Accountants" include some accountants' clerks and commercial clerks, notwithstanding efforts made to exclude them; "Auctioneers, Appraisers, Valuers, House Agents" have increased partly at the expense of the heading for "Land, House, Ship—Surveyors" (Order III.), and the "Officers of Commercial Guilds, Societies, etc.," at the expense of commercial clerks, through the more definite information given in column 11 of the schedule. The figures, as returned, for these several headings were as follows :—

	Persons.	Males.	Females.	Persons.	Males.	Females.
Merchants (commodity undefined) ...	5,151	5,133	18	5,536	5,494	42
Brokers, Agents, Factors	42,387	41,108	1,279	44,154	41,427	2,727
Salesmen, Buyers (not otherwise described)	2,462	1,913	549	1,404	1,205	199
Commercial Travellers	64,322	63,940	382	86,495	85,830	665
Accountants	9,028	9,026	2	9,499	9,480	19
Auctioneers, House Agents, etc. ...	14,020	13,934	86	17,854	17,623	231
Officers of Commercial Guilds, Societies, etc.	1,870	1,680	190	3,809	3,391	418

Comparison of the figures for commercial travellers at the two censuses is probably not vitiated to any great extent by the inevitable inclusion of some members of the "hawker" class, and the large increase of 34·5 per cent. may be accepted as rather under than over the true rate owing to the more complete separation of the doubtful cases at the later census. This improvement in the returns is indicated by the continued drop in the ratio of foreigners in the total number of commercial travellers; in 1891 it had been as high as one in 27, in 1901 one in 36, and in 1911 one in 46.

Commercial or Business Clerks.—These numbered 477,535, of whom 360,478 were males and 117,057 females. The numbers, especially of males, would have been higher had not column 11 of the schedule enabled us to classify many clerks in banks, insurance offices, poor law and municipal service, etc. to the service in which they were engaged (see also page xxxviii). As it is, the clerks show an increase of 31·3 per cent. (17·1 per cent. for males and 109·8 per cent. for females) upon the numbers returned under this heading in 1901. Between 1891 and 1901 the total increased by 47·1 per cent., the males by 34·2 per cent., while the females more than trebled in number. The ratio of female to male clerks, which was 7·8 per cent. in 1891, and 18·1 per cent. in 1901, rose to 32·5 per cent. in 1911. The proportion of foreign clerks has remained stationary; in 1901 there were 5,195 male foreigners in this occupation, and in 1911, 6,171, the ratio to the total males being 1·7 per cent. at each census.

The ages of commercial clerks of both sexes are given in the following statement, which shows, among other things, that the increase among males has been maintained at the ages above 35 years, and that the displacement of male by female labour has been most marked in the earlier years of life :—

COMMERCIAL CLERKS.

——		Total.	10–	15–	20–	25–	35–	45–	55–	65–	75 and upwards.
MALES	1901	307,889	9,888	76,706	65,436	77,168	40,650	22,718	11,402	3,429	492
	1911	360,478	6,856	87,824	72,321	90,374	52,898	29,598	15,016	4,982	609
FEMALES	1901	55,784	1,339	19,187	17,997	12,921	3,088	894	284	64	10
	1911	117,057	2,114	39,549	36,824	29,096	7,040	1,866	482	81	5

The occupation of commercial clerk is, as is shown by the above figures, essentially one for the young. Of the male clerks between the ages of 15 and 65 no fewer than 72 per cent. were under 35 years of age, against only 54 per cent. in all occupations—proportions differing but little from those in 1901, which were 75 per cent. and 57 per cent. respectively. The age-distribution of male clerks compared with that of all occupied males between 15 and 65 years of age is shown below :—

——		Per 1,000 Males aged 15–65.
		15–	20–	25–	35–	45–	55–65
All Occupied Males	1901 ...	157	153	260	201	143	86
	1911 ...	142	137	262	215	153	91
Commercial Clerks	1901 ...	261	223	262	138	77	39
	1911 ...	252	208	260	152	85	43

Thus, among all occupied males the proportion in 1911 at the age-group 35-45 was 18 per cent. less than that at the age-group 25-35, while among male commercial clerks it was 41 per cent. less; at the two succeeding age-groups the corresponding decline was 29 per cent. and 41 per cent. respectively for all occupied males, and as much as 44 per cent. and 49 per cent. respectively for commercial clerks.

Banking.—The Bankers, Bank Officials and Clerks increased from 30,292 to 40,379, or by 33·3 per cent.; female clerks are employed only to a small extent in banks, but their numbers increased from 223 to 476 between the two censuses. Among males the proportional increase has been greatest in the three decennial age-periods from 25-55. Bill Discounters and Brokers, together with Finance Agents, numbered 3,570 in 1911, against 1,036 in 1901; this increase may be due to some extent to the larger number of persons returning themselves as Moneylenders, and partly also to the more definite information as to the clerks connected with the various occupations grouped under this heading.

Insurance.—Persons engaged in Life, House, Ship, etc. Insurance are distinguished in the tables as "Officials, Clerks, etc.," and as "Agents"; the former were twice as numerous as in 1901, having increased from 21,961 to 45,897, while the latter increased from 34,427 to 54,031, or by 56·9 per cent. The clerks included 4,031 females in 1911, against 931 in 1901; and the agents, 595 and 244 respectively.

Grouping together all clerks in this Order, no fewer than 243,405 (186,643 males and 56,762 females) out of a total of 563,811 (442,247 males and 121,564 females) were enumerated in London and the adjoining counties; and in this area they were in the proportion of 27·4 per 1,000 of the population, against 11·8 per 1,000 in the rest of England and Wales. It is not possible to give a complete total for all clerks, because in some cases they are not classified separately from other workers. A rough approximation to the total may, however, be obtained by combining the principal headings under which clerks form the main body of the workers, viz. :—

	Males.	Females.
(1) Civil Service Officers and Clerks	61,213	22,034
(2) Municipal, Parish, etc. Officers	41,620	1,606
(3) Law Clerks	34,106	2,159
(4) Commercial or Business Clerks	360,478	117,057
(5) Bankers; Bank—Officials, Clerks...	39,903	476
(6) Insurance Officials and Clerks	41,866	4,031
(7) Railway Officials and Clerks	84,802	1,120
	663,988	148,483

Dealers.

In the preceding paragraphs we have referred to all the classes included in the Fifth Order, which is designated "Commercial Occupations." There remains, however, a very large class which may also be said to be engaged in "commercial" occupations, although for the purposes of the census classification they are not included in this Order. The class in question comprises the wholesale and retail dealers and their assistants in the various commodities classified in Orders IX.–XXII., and their numbers in relation to the makers or producers of those commodities will be considered in the subsequent paragraphs relating to the various Orders. It will be convenient, however, first to consider the numbers of "Dealers" as a whole. Suggestions were made, previous to the census of 1901, by the Home Office and the Board of Trade "that Dealers should be eliminated "from the several Orders in which Makers are classified, and should be divided into "(1) 'Wholesale Merchants and Dealers,' and (2) 'Shopkeepers and Retail "Dealers'; the former to be shown under a single heading, and the latter to be "constituted a separate Order with Sub-orders for (1) Those dealing in Food, (2) Those "dealing in Textile Fabrics and Clothing, (3) Other Shopkeepers, and (4) Other "Retail Dealers." (See Report on the Census of England and Wales, 1901, page 97.) The reasons there given for not complying with these suggestions are still operative. Although we have attempted, as on the previous occasion, to separate "Dealers" from "Makers, Producers, or Repairers," it cannot be claimed that the distinction has always been possible. In many cases the line of demarcation is obscure or non-existent; for instance, a man who would ordinarily describe himself as a "baker" or "tailor" might be wholly engaged in making bread or clothes, or in selling them, and though in the latter case he was instructed on the schedule to add the word "dealer," "shop-keeper," or "shop-assistant" to his occupational name, such qualification was doubtless frequently omitted; moreover, many persons combine production and distribution, and these were asked to return themselves as "Makers" or "Dealers," according to the branch in which they were chiefly engaged. Similar difficulties arise with regard to the distinction between "wholesale" and "retail" trade; in but few cases do the commercial designations indicate these characteristics, and the attempt to obtain definite information with regard to them would add to the complexity of the schedule, without much prospect of success in view of the number of instances in which both branches are carried on by the same person. The several headings under which Dealers are returned could of course have been eliminated from the various Orders in which the Producers are classified, but the two classes are so intermixed that we have thought it better to adhere to the classification of previous censuses rather than introduce a change which is of doubtful value in itself, and would seriously interfere with the value of the figures for comparative purposes.

For the convenience of those interested in the figures, the numbers of "Dealers" have been grouped in the following table, and are compared with the numbers similarly returned in 1901. It will be seen that the numbers of males increased from 988,601 to 1,224,215, and the numbers of females from 369,899 to 570,566. The proportional increase among males is only 23·8 per cent., while among females it is 54·2 per cent.; the explanation of the apparently excessive rise among females is probably to be found in the new instruction on the schedule, that "the occupations of women . . . . regularly engaged in assisting relatives "in trade or business, must be fully stated." The result of this instruction is that so many wives and other female relatives have now for the first time been included as occupied in the businesses in which they assist that the figures have but little value for purposes of comparison; and, as might be expected, the recorded rate of increase for unmarried females (43·4 per cent.) is much less than that for the married and widowed (73·1 per cent.). This subject is also referred to on page cxxxv. in connexion with the occupations of married women.

The industry tables show 13,826 males and 2,066 females to have been classed as "additional workers" in the employ of "Merchants," or "Salesmen, Buyers." In the same way that the heading "Merchants" includes undefined in addition to general merchants, so the clerks (10,731 males and 1,870 females), warehousemen (1,581 males), and messengers, porters, etc., (843 males) included as additional workers comprise those working for general merchants, as well as a number for whom no statement was made as to the commodity in which their employers dealt. The fact that these numbers were greatest in those districts where most of the general merchants were returned, viz., London and adjoining counties, Lancashire, and Cheshire, suggests that the statement was not omitted in any considerable number of cases.

In dealing with industries it has been found impracticable to classify Brokers, Agents, Factors, according to the business of their principals or employers, for the reason that they may deal in many different commodities, or may act for one or for a few principals or employers or for a large number of clients. It should be mentioned that this occupational and industry heading does not include persons in the employ of government or local authorities, of railway, canal, shipping, dock, and carrying or cartage companies, nor of banking or insurance companies. They also exclude mine and quarry agents, land, house and estate agents, finance agents, advertising and bill posting agents, opera and theatre agents, and a few occupations, such as news-agent, book agent, coal agent, furniture broker, scrap iron broker, wine and spirit agents, in which persons, though described as agents, are commonly dealers. The heading, as given in the industry tables, comprised, in addition to the 41,427 males and 2,727 females shown in the occupation tables, 26,416 male and 3,407 female workers, these numbers including commercial travellers (261 males), clerks (22,759 males and 3,210 females), carmen, motor van, etc. drivers (328 males), warehousemen (316 males), messengers, porters (2,070 males), and general labourers (182 males).

Auctioneers are shown in the industry tables as employing 11,748 male and 911 female commercial clerks, 1,835 messengers, porters, watchmen, 246 painters and decorators, 375 others engaged in building, and works of construction, 234 general labourers, and 218 caretakers, office keepers. In accountants' offices nearly all the workers other than those classed as accountants in the occupation tables were either commercial clerks (10,761 males and 771 females), or messengers, porters, watchmen (340 males).

Commercial Travellers were found to number 86,495 (85,830 males and 665 females), of whom 81,471 males and 514 females were returned as connected with specified industries (Table 28). These persons are scattered as "additional workers" over many other portions of the same table, being assigned to the "dealer" not the "manufacturer" heading in nearly all, i.e., the employer of a commercial traveller, if a manufacturer, is regarded for this purpose as a dealer in his own wares. The industries with which the male commercial travellers for whom the information is available were connected were as follows :—

With regard to the commercial clerks, who are shown for convenience under a separate heading in the industry tables, it will be seen that out of the total, 360,478 males and 117,057 females, returned as following this occupation, as many as 320,020 males and 94,860 females were assigned to the various industries or services, their distribution being summarised in the following statement; reference to the numbers of clerks employed will be made in paragraphs relating to the particular industries or services in which clerks are of numerical importance, and full detail of their distribution is given in columns 14 and 28 of Table 28, pages 560 to 593.

VI. Conveyance of Men, Goods, and Messages.—The Sixth Order comprised an aggregate of 1,423,868 persons (1,399,394 males and 24,474 females), classified under the five sub-orders: (1) on Railways, (2) on Roads, (3) on Seas, Rivers, and Canals, (4) in Docks, Harbours, and Lighthouses, and (5) in Storage, Porterage, and Messages. In 1901 the total number of persons in this Order was 1,267,825 (1,249,000 males and 18,825 females), but this total included Post Office Telegraphists and Telephone Operators, who, in 1911, were included in Order I., and numbered 4,245 males and 6,093 females; including these for the purpose of comparison, there has been an increase of 13·1 per cent., or 12·4 per cent. among males and 62·4 per cent. among females.

On Railways.—There were classified to this sub-order 400,626 persons (of whom only 2,636 were females), compared with 353,352 persons (of whom 1,441 were females) in 1901, the increase being equal to 13·4 per cent. By excluding "Platelayers, Gangers, Packers, and Railway Labourers," a comparison of the numbers employed at each census from 1851 onwards can be made; the figures are as follows:—

Census Year.	Numbers employed.	Increase per cent.	Census Year.	Numbers employed.	Increase per cent.
1851*	25,236	.	1891	186,774	34·0
1861*	53,542	112·2	1901	276,930	48·3
1871*	84,900	58·6	1911	323,307	16·7
1881	139,408	64·2

* The figures for 1851, 1861, and 1871 include the "Retired."

The above figures show a rate of increase between 1901 and 1911 somewhat higher than that for the sub-order as a whole, but one which is much below that recorded at any of the preceding censuses. The volume of traffic, as measured by the total gross receipts, rose from the sum of £90,703,770 in 1901 to £109,189,734 in 1911, an increase of 20·4 per cent., though the length of line open at the beginning of these years only increased from 15,195 miles to 16,148 miles, or by 6·3 per cent.

The several classes of railway workers are distinguished in the following statement:—

	1901.	1911.
Railway—Officials, Clerks	68,541	85,922
Railway Engine—Drivers, Stokers, Cleaners	66,135	69,683
Railway Guards	20,828	21,137
Signalmen	24,996	26,071
Pointsmen, Level Crossing Men	14,219	14,833
Platelayers, Gangers, Packers	46,860	51,620
Railway Labourers (not Railway Contractors' Labourers)	29,562	25,699
Railway Ticket—Examiners, Collectors, Checkers	82,211	3,426
Railway Porters		58,311
Other Railway Servants		43,924
Total	353,352	400,626

The numbers classified under the different headings at the two censuses must not, however, be regarded as strictly comparable, owing to revision of the classification of some of the subsidiary occupations comprised in them, but the greatest increases have apparently been among the officials and clerks and among the porters and other servants. The age-distribution of the railway workers shows a reduction in the numbers of "Officials and Clerks" up to 20 years and of all others up to 25 years.

The occupational headings relating to persons employed on railways do not, of course, represent adequately the total number in the service of railway companies. The industry tables show that when all the railway employees following the various occupations connected with railway service are added, and all the railway workers who are employed in connexion with other industries or services are deducted, the net total in railway companies' service is raised to 542,965 persons (535,795 males and 7,170 females). This total includes, in addition to the 451,263 males and 3,763 females shown as the grand total under the heading railways in the industry table, 84,532 males and 3,407 females who could, from the returns, be definitely assigned to the following industries not classified under railways in these tables, viz., 41,538 males and 24 females who were employed in railway companies' engineering works; 26,291 males and 510 females in railway companies' coach and wagon building; 9,555 males and 18 females in railway companies' harbour, dock, wharf service; 4,115 males and 61 females in railway companies' shipping and navigation service, and 2,927 males and 2,971 females in railway companies' hotel and catering service. The "additional workers" of the industry tables include an almost equally large number of persons who were either engaged in the general business of the railways or could not be assigned to any of the particular branches named because the information was not given in the returns. Of the total number of railway employees not classified to Sub-order VI. 1 in the occupation tables, the largest numbers were railway coach, wagon makers (22,461 males), carmen (22,129 males), van guards (5,289 males), erectors, fitters, turners, and their labourers (20,812) males), blacksmiths (8,469 males), boiler makers (7,889 males), electricians (4,031 males), carpenters and their labourers (4,925 males), dock labourers (3,613 males), dock, harbour, etc. officials (2,231 males), painters (3,302 males), waiters and others (not domestic) in hotel and catering service (1,976 males and 1,749 females), bricklayers and their labourers (2,544 males), ironfounders (1,851 males), telegraph, etc. service (2,002 males), coalheavers, coal porters (1,663 males), and horsekeepers (1,223 males).

Among the railway workers employed in connexion with other industries or services were 4,919 employed by proprietors of coal mines, 3,060 by iron and steel manufacturers, 1,252 in connexion with general engineering works, 573 in local authority (harbour, dock, etc.) service, 374 in other dock and harbour service, and 362 by railway, canal, harbour, etc. contractors.

On Roads.—The persons included in this sub-order numbered 474,815 in 1911, against 431,651 in 1901, the increase in the ten years being 10·0 per cent. In order, however, to arrive at the total numbers engaged in road traffic, it is necessary to add the coachmen, grooms, motor car drivers and attendants who are classed in Order IV. (Domestic Service). With the addition of these the numbers are raised to 565,195 in 1911, against 507,006 in 1901, and show an increase of only 11·5 per cent., as against that of 38·3 per cent. in the preceding ten years. Very few females are returned in these occupations, and in the following comparative statement the figures relate to males only :—

The distinction between the "domestic" and the "non-domestic" classes cannot always be made with certainty from the returns, and the figures cannot, therefore, be regarded as very reliable—especially in the case of the two headings for Motor Car Drivers (see also page xxviii). The classification of "Motor Car Drivers," as distinct from "Motor Van, etc. Drivers," is also not very satisfactory owing to the tendency of the latter to describe themselves as "Motor Car Drivers," and to the absence of definition of the two classes of vehicles.

"Livery Stable Keepers, etc.," declined from 12,479 to 10,989, or by 11·9 per cent., and "Coachmen, Grooms, etc. (not Domestic)," from 113,465 to 75,361, or by 33·6 per cent., the figures indicating a great decrease in the workers connected with light horse-drawn vehicles. The age-distribution shows that the decline in both these occupations chiefly affected the younger men; only 28·9 per cent. of the male livery stable keepers between the ages of 15 and 65 were under 35 in 1911, against 31·1 per cent. in 1901; and among coachmen and grooms (not domestic) the proportions were 43·9 and 54·5 per cent. respectively.

Carmen, Carriers, Carters, Van Guards, etc., show a substantial increase, even if the number of motor van drivers, etc., be disregarded, the numbers of males having risen from 272,300 to 307,369, or by 12·9 per cent.; in spite of this increase in the total, however, it is remarkable that at ages under 25 there is a drop of no less than 16,000. In 1901 the heading for "Motor Car Drivers" was first introduced, and then included 623 males; in 1911 the three headings under which drivers of motor cars, cabs, vans, etc., are classified included 43,094 males, and there were in addition 2,849 motor drivers in Omnibus Service. The total number of male workers in Omnibus Service was 11,442, against 11,974 in 1901, a decline of 4·4 per cent. In London there was a decrease from 7,651 to 6,851, but in the four adjoining counties the increases more than compensated for this deficiency; and the total in the whole area rose from 9,188 to 9,352. The increase in the number of persons employed in Tramway Service has been remarkable, as will be seen from the following numbers returned at each census since 1871 :—

Only a few females are classified to this heading, the numbers being 72 in 1901 and 607 in 1911. The local distribution of the males at the last two censuses is summarised below :—

While there has been an increase of 128·3 per cent. in the number of male tramway workers since 1901, as shown by the above figures, the number of miles of tramways and light railways has increased from 933 at the beginning of 1901 to 2,103 at the beginning of 1911—an increase of 125·4 per cent.—and the number of passengers conveyed rose from 932 millions in the former year to 2,389 millions in the latter, or by 156·3 per cent.

The classification by industry or service enables the workers connected with road transport to be shown under headings differing considerably from those adopted for the occupational classification. The following table gives the net total employed under each heading in the industry tables after bringing in the additional workers and excluding persons engaged in road transport in connexion with other industries:—

TABLE XIV.—PERSONS EMPLOYED IN ROAD TRANSPORT SERVICES.

In the above table, coachmen and horsekeepers returned as in the employ of livery stable keepers, etc., are included in the first column, and numbered 8,119 and 8,371 respectively; the additional workers under the heading included commercial clerks (432 males), carmen (378 males), coach makers, wheelwrights (280 males), and blacksmiths (162 males). Motor cab companies employed 1,184 garage workers and 7,299 cab drivers, and included, as "additional workers," 705 motor car mechanics and 276 commercial clerks. Motor garages (other than those belonging to motor cab companies) gave employment to 2,592 garage workers (including proprietors), and 967 car drivers, and, in addition, to 1,363 motor car mechanics and 249 commercial clerks. In omnibus service additional workers included 1,092 motor car mechanics, and in tramway service there were 1,759 tram car makers, 1,286 electricians, etc. 1,100 paviours, road labourers, and 557 erectors, fitters, turners (including labourers). Under the heading "others on roads" are included the 21,728 coachmen, 35,331 horsekeepers, and 7,221 motor car drivers who were not assigned to the preceding headings in the table; it will be noticed that nearly 20,000 of these workers (of whom 14,991 were horsekeepers) were returned as connected with various other industries or services.

The 313,637 males shown in the table as engaged in carrying and cartage service, comprised all the 278,443 carmen, carriers, etc., 16,835 van guards, van boys, 4,456 motor van drivers, and 12,091 "others connected with carrying or cartage," so classified in the occupation tables, and 1,812 of the horsekeepers, stablemen, etc. No fewer than 163,540 of the carmen, 10,492 of the van guards, van boys, and 3,168 of the motor van drivers were, however, returned as working in connexion with various industries, other than carrying and cartage service.

The following summary shows the numbers of carmen and motor van drivers returned as employed in the various groups of industries or services represented by the occupational orders. Of the van guards, van boys, 5,289 were employed by railway companies.

* These numbers are exlcusive of carmen returned as employed in those branches of general or local government, or railway companies' service, which are not classified to these headings.

On Seas, Rivers, and Canals, and in Docks, Harbours, etc.—The number of persons returned as engaged in Sea, River, and Canal Transport Service was 133,233, while 123,045 were employed in Docks, Harbours, etc., making a total of 256,278, against 232,420 in 1901, the increase being equal to 10·3 per cent. The changes since 1901 in the numbers following the occupations in this group are shown below; part of the increase in the number of Harbour, Dock, etc.—Officials and Servants may be due to more definite returns at the later census.

The number of persons enumerated in the Merchant Service was 99,804 in 1911, against 97,881 in 1901, showing an increase of 2·0 per cent., against a decrease of 9·2 per cent. in the previous ten years. Sub-division of the heading in use in 1901 has been made at the suggestion of the Registrar General of Shipping and Seamen, and with the view of bringing the census classification into line with that of his department, the figures are now given under four headings—Navigating Department (45,494 males), Engineering Department (31,524 males), Cooks, Stewards, and Subsidiary Services (15,514 males and 596 females), and Pilots and Boatmen (6,667 males and 9 females). These numbers relate to all seamen, British and Foreign, on shore or on board vessels which were in the ports of England and Wales on census night, or arrived on the following day. The total number of seamen enumerated by the Registrar General of Shipping and Seamen as employed on the 3rd April, 1911, in trading vessels registered in the British Islands, under Part I. of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, was 208,214, against 186,636 in 1901, and of these 136,580 and 120,412 respectively were of British nationality. The number of British seamen employed on sailing vessels declined from 24,983 in 1901 to 10,433 in 1911, while the number on steam vessels rose from 95,429 to 126,147—see Return of Number, Ages, Ratings, and Nationalities of Seamen (Cd. 6,442), 1912.

The heading "Bargemen, Lightermen, Watermen" showed a decline of 6·6 per cent., from 30,180 in 1901 to 28,187 in 1911, the numbers including respectively 362 and 358 females. In London and the adjoining counties the decrease, taking the figures for males only, was 12·7 per cent.; in Lancashire and Cheshire together, 10·0 per cent.; in Staffordshire, Worcestershire, and Warwickshire, 6·1 per cent., while in Yorkshire (East Riding) there was an increase of 20·0 per cent. Comparing the age-distribution of bargemen, etc., at the two censuses, it will be seen that the numbers under 35 years of age decreased from 14,658 to 12,272, while the numbers over 35 increased from 15,160 to 15,567. The "Dock Labourers, Wharf Labourers," who showed an increase of 15·8 per cent. at all ages, have fallen off in numbers under 25 years. The following figures indicate how largely this occupation was recruited at ages from 25 to 45, and how rapidly the numbers fell at the most advanced ages:—

The local distribution is shown below, the large proportional increases in Hampshire, Lincolnshire, Monmouthshire, and Glamorganshire being specially noteworthy.

The industry tables show that Shipping and Navigation Service on Seas, Rivers, and Canals, together with Harbour, Dock, Wharf, and Lighthouse Service, employed a net total of 283,791 persons (281,888 males and 1,903 females), as against the 256,278 persons classified to the occupational headings relating to these services. The "additional workers" in Navigation Service included the following numbers of persons in the employ of shipping companies, viz.:—commercial clerks (6,764 males and 342 females), dock and wharf labourers (2,696 males), harbour, dock, wharf, etc. officials (795 males), persons engaged in shipbuilding (1,635 males), general labourers (1,978 males), and messengers, porters, watchmen (743 males). The numbers of seamen (ashore and in port) and of bargemen, etc., returned as working in connexion with other industries were 4,496 and 4,606 respectively. Railway companies' shipping and navigation service, which is included above, employed 4,115 males and 61 females.

In harbours, docks, wharves, and lighthouses there were returned as harbour, dock, etc. officials and servants 20,406 persons (including 23 females), and 102,639 dock, etc. labourers, and, in addition to these, the returns show that a further 25,181 males and 194 females were employed in connexion with harbours, docks, etc. These additional workers included, among others, general labourers (6,192 males), commercial clerks (4,988 males), coalheavers. coal porters (2,139 males), railway men (1,369), carpenters, joiners, and their labourers (791 males), messengers, porters, watchmen (718 males), erectors, fitters, turners, and their labourers (636 males), ship and boat builders (534 males), boatmen (509 males), and warehousemen (503 males). These numbers relate to all harbours, docks, etc., whether under the direct control of dock companies, of railway companies, of Local Authorities, or of the National Government, but the figures for the four classes separately will be found in the tables.

The number of Messengers, Porters, Watchmen (not Railway or Government), which showed an increase of only 3·6 per cent. between 1891 and 1901, rose from 185,487 to 231,746, or by 24·9 per cent. in the succeeding ten years; the males increased by 23·6 per cent. and the comparatively small number of females by 75·1 per cent. At ages under 15 the boys increased by 4·5 per cent., while boys of the same ages in all occupations decreased by 12·4 per cent. Of the males at all ages in this occupation, no less than 73·2 per cent. were under 20, against 71·4 per cent. in 1901; the corresponding figures for females were 93·9 and 95·5 per cent. The age-constitution of the males shows a very great falling-off in the numbers employed at 20-25, but between 25 and 55 the decline is very gradual, probably owing in some degree to the employment as porters, watchmen, etc., of men who had served in the army. The following are the numbers of males at the several ages :—

MESSENGERS, PORTERS, WATCHMEN (MALES).

Census.	Total.	10–	15–	20–	25–	35–	45–	55–	65–	75 and upwards.

Of the 223,008 males classified as "Messengers, Porters, Watchmen," 179,729 are tabulated according to the business or profession in which they were employed. Quite a considerable proportion of them were returned as working for shopkeepers, and in these cases the majority would be errand boys. The numbers employed in the various industries or services are shown in the following summary compiled from Table 28.

"Coalheavers, Coal Porters" to the number of 8,928 were returned as in the employ of coal merchants, and a further 2,139 as working in connexion with harbour, dock, wharf service; altogether 13,190 out of the 32,533 coal heavers were returned according to the industry or service in which they were employed.

"Telegraph, Telephone Service (not government)" employed, in addition to the 8,858 males and 8,235 females classified under this heading in the occupation tables, a further 5,354 males and 376 females who were shown by the industry tabulation to be connected with this service; of these, 4,238 of the males were electrical apparatus makers or fitters, or electricians (undefined). The telegraphists, telephone operators included 1,984 males returned as in the employ of railway companies.

VII. Agriculture.—The number of persons classified under this Order as engaged in Agriculture (on Farms, Woods, and Gardens) was 1,235,237, of whom 1,140,515 were males and 94,722 females; in 1901 the numbers so classified were 1,128,604 persons (1,071,040 males and 57,564 females). It may be stated at once that the increase of 37,158 in the number of females is probably due almost entirely to the more complete return in 1911, owing to the revised instructions and examples on the schedule, of farmers' and graziers' daughters and other female relatives assisting in the work of the farm; under this heading the numbers rose from 18,618 to 56,856. The increase by 69,475 in the number of males returned as engaged in agriculture is so remarkable, having regard to the fact that each census since 1851 had shown a decline, as to raise the question whether it is not fictitious and attributable to some change in classification or difference in method of return rather than to an actual increase of agricultural employment. Some part of it is undoubtedly due to improvement in the returns enabling many of the labourers, who in default of information at previous censuses as to the nature of their work had necessarily to be classed as "General Labourers" (Order XXII.), to be assigned to their proper heading as Agricultural Labourers; the extent of this transfer, as between 1901 and 1911, must, however, have been much less than the total reduction of 18,079 in the number classed as general labourers in the aggregate of the Rural Districts. A further possibility of error exists in the difficulty, which has always been found, in regard to the classification of domestic gardeners as distinct from other gardeners, and in the separation of carters and wagoners on farms from those ordinarily working on roads, but an examination of the rules for coding and of the figures under the respective headings has failed to reveal any change which would have the effect of increasing the numbers classified under agriculture.

The numbers returned under the several headings in 1901 and 1911 are given in the following table. The totals as they stand cannot fairly be compared with those for the earlier censuses, and in order to carry the comparison back to 1851 they must be modified by the inclusion of domestic gardeners, and by the exclusion of farmers' sons and other male relatives under 15 years, and of female relatives of all ages who were returned as assisting in the work of the farm, since the procedure adopted included more of these persons at some censuses than at others. Having regard to the wide differences in the nature of the employment of workers under the heading "Farm—Bailiffs, Foremen," and to the fact that many farmers' sons and other male relatives are performing the same duties as ordinary agricultural labourers, these men are included under the heading of "farm workers (employees)."

The numbers of males and females at each census 1851-1911, and the proportion per cent. of these numbers to the total population aged 10 years and upwards, are given below :—

* The figures for 1851, 1861, and 1871 include the " Retired."

Grouping the figures in this way, and so avoiding any risk of error through possible changes in the method of return of Gardeners and of Farmers' Relatives, the males increased from 1,153,185 in 1901 to 1,253,859 in 1911, or by 8·7 per cent. ; in each previous intercensal period there had been a decline, amounting in 1891-1901 to 6·5 per cent., in 1881-91 to 4·2 per cent., in 1871-81 to 6·1 per cent., and in 1861-71 to no less than 11·0 per cent. Thus the rate of decrease from the period 1861-71 onwards shows a constant tendency to diminution, interrupted only at the period 1891-1901, when an appreciable proportion of the decrease shown may well be attributable to absence from this country of an abnormal number of agricultural workers owing to the South African War. a

The females included in the above table declined from 38,982 in 1901 to 37,969 in 1911, or by 2·6 per cent., compared with a decrease of 23·6 per cent. in 1891-1901 ; the figures are, however, open to the suspicion of possible overlapping between Farm Servants and Domestic Servants on Farms.

Confining comparison with previous censuses to male and female farmers and graziers and male farm workers (excluding farmers' relatives under 15 years of age) we have the following figures :—

* The figures for 1851, 1861, and 1871 include the retired.
† For the numbers under the several headings in this group, see Table on page xlv.

These figures show an increase in the number of persons returned as Farmers and Graziers from 224,299 in 1901 to 228,788 in 1911, or 2·0 per cent., and in the number of Male Farm Workers from 715,138 to 757,552, or 5·9 per cent., the increase on the whole group being 5·0 per cent. Even if it be assumed that improvement in the return, as indicated by the reduction of " General Labourers," is responsible for a transfer of as many as 10,000 men from " General Labourer " to "Agricultural Labourer " (leaving only 8,000 out of the total 18,000 reduction under this heading, referred to on page xlv., for transfer to other industries, such as mining, carried on in rural districts), and that the number withdrawn from agricultural labour owing to the war amounted a In a paper read before the Royal Statistical Society in June, 1907, by Lord Eversley, on " The Decline in Number of Agricultural Labourers in Great Britain," the understatement from this cause is estimated at 20,000. This estimate, which the author characterises as a very low one, is based upon the average proportion of men who, on enlistment, were described as agricultural labourers.

to as much as 40,000, there would be but a very slight decrease (about 1 per cent.) compared with those recorded in the four preceding intercensal periods. In the case of agriculturists as a whole, whether on farms, woods, or gardens, it may be seen that even on the above assumptions there has been an actual as well as an apparent increase during the past intercensal period.

The following table gives the acreage under crops and grass, and the numbers of horses, cattle, sheep, and pigs, in the three census years, 1891, 1901, and 1911, as shown in the reports of the Board of Agriculture and Fisheries :—

* The area returned as under Orchards was 208,069 acres in 1891; 232,347 acres in 1901; and 248,676 acres in 1911. This is included among the several headings of which the total acreage under crops and grass is made up. In addition to this total there were returned as "mountain and heath lands used for grazing," 2,815,063 acres in 1892; 3,556,636 acres in 1901; and 3,806,236 acres in 1911; these figures are only approximative, especially in the year 1892, when returns under this heading were first collected.

It would thus appear that the total acreage under crops and grass declined by only 1·0 per cent. in 1901-1911, against 1·7 per cent. in 1891-1901, but that the proportional decline of arable land was greater in the later than in the earlier period, viz. :—6·8 per cent., against 6·1 per cent., and amounted in the whole twenty years to upwards of 1,600,000 acres.

This large decline of arable land is almost necessarily associated with lessened employment in agriculture, and the fact that the total decrease in each decade was approximately equal may have led to the assumption that there was an equal decline in agricultural employment. Reference to the foregoing table, however, shows that whereas in the earlier period the diminution of the total arable area was almost entirely due to the falling off in the area under corn crops, in the later period it was due mainly to reduction in the area under clover and rotation grasses. It is at least probable that changes of the latter kind (which must be considered in relation to changes in the area of permanent pasture) would have less effect on the amount of labour required than would similar changes in the area under corn crops, and on this assumption the displacement of labour consequent on the reduction of arable land would be greater in the earlier that in the later decade. Further analysis of the total acreage under crops shows that the small decline in the corn area in 1901-1911 was not distributed over the whole country, but occurred in spite of a small increase in the principal corn growing counties.

In connexion with this increase in the corn growing counties the following statement of the average prices of British wheat per imperial quarter in England and Wales may be of interest :—

1890	31	11	1900.....	26	11	1910.....	31	8

The live stock returns all improved between 1901 and 1911 as regards numbers except in the case of horses. The most important figures bearing on occupations are those relating to cows and heifers in milk or in calf (the " milking herd "), which showed an increase of 10·4 per cent. In the report of the Board of Agriculture for 1911 it is shown that the total of the " milking herd " in that year was the largest recorded, the number being 2,392,880, or 88 per 1,000 acres of cultivated land, compared with 79 per 1,000 acres ten years previously.

In addition to the above causes the development of fruit farming and market gardening have also contributed, in some counties, to the apparent arrest of the decline in the number of persons classified as farm workers ; as far as possible, labourers in orchards and market gardeners are excluded from the heading " Agricultural Labourer, Farm Servant," but the returns do not always permit of the distinction being made.

We have already referred to the unreliability of the comparison of the numbers of female farm workers at the two censuses, and for this reason the male workers, together with farmers and graziers of both sexes, are taken (see page xlvi.) as representative of the increase or decrease in the numbers of persons engaged on farms. Further, although farm workers are classified under six separate headings in the tables (see page xlv.), there has obviously been considerable interchange among them owing to differences in the method of return at the two censuses, and comparisons of the numbers shown under the individual headings would, therefore, be misleading. The effect of the changes in the method of return has been to show an apparent decrease in the numbers of shepherds and of farm labourers distinguished as in charge of cattle or of horses, coupled with a very large increase in the number of farm labourers not otherwise distinguished. The increase in the numbers of sheep and cattle, as shown in the table on page xlvii., would have suggested an increase in the numbers of men in charge of them, and the anomalous decrease may possibly be due to a misreading of the instruction on the schedule.

The following table shows the numbers of Farmers and Farm Workers (including farmers' male relatives under 15 years returned as assisting in the work of the farm) in the several counties, which have been grouped in the divisions adopted in the reports of the Board of Agriculture and Fisheries. The letter " a " prefixed to the name of a county denotes that the land under cultivation, as shown in the Board's report for 1911, was mainly arable, and the letter " g " denotes " grazing " counties, i.e., those in which the land under cultivation was mainly permanent pasture. All the counties marked " a," except Hampshire and Cornwall, had more than half of their arable land under corn crops in 1911 ; Hampshire had 46·2 per cent. and Cornwall only 33·3 per cent.—the greater part of the arable land in the latter county being under clover or rotation grasses in 1911.

* No allowance is made in these rates for the under-statement of the figures in 1901, referred to on page xlvi.

The males classified as Farmers or Graziers increased from 202,751 to 208,761, while the females decreased from 21,548 to 20,027 ; for the two sexes jointly the number increased from 224,299 to 228,788, or by 2·0 per cent. The only arable county in which the farmers decreased was Lincolnshire, and there the decline was but slight, amounting to 0·8 per cent. The decrease was fairly general in the grazing area comprised in the Northern, North-western, and Welsh counties, but outside this group there was only one grazing county—Monmouthshire—in which a decline in the numbers was recorded ; the greatest decrease was in the West Riding of Yorkshire, where it amounted to 5·6 per cent. Increases of over 10 per cent. in the number of farmers occurred in three arable counties (Huntingdonshire, Essex, and Hampshire) and—excluding London and Middlesex—in three grazing counties (Surrey, Sussex, and Oxfordshire).

The ages of the males returned as "Farmers, Graziers," at the last three censuses were as follows :—

—	Total.	10–	15–	20–	25–	35–	45–	55–	65–	75 and upwards.

At the youngest ages the very considerable drop in the numbers between 1891 and 1901 suggests that at the earlier census some relatives who were only assisting in the work of the farm were classed as "Farmers," and if such were the case the actual increase in the number of farmers in that period would be greater than the totals indicate. At the most advanced ages also the numbers have declined, the large decrease above 75 years of age between 1901 and 1911 being probably due to more complete returns of the " retired " at the later census. Between 25 and 35, and again between 55 and 65, the numbers were almost stationary, and the substantial increase occurred between 35 and 55, the greater part of the increase occurring at 35-45 in the period 1891-1901, and at 45-55 in 1901-1911.

The male Farm Workers numbered altogether 762,947, against 720,893 in 1901, and thus showed an increase of 5·8 per cent. Omitting London, in which the numbers were inconsiderable, the two counties showing the greatest increase were Huntingdonshire (14·5 per cent.) and Cambridgeshire (14·9 per cent.). In connexion with this increase it may be noted that the farmers increased by 11·1 and 9·9 per cent. respectively in these counties, and that while the total arable land was practically identical in the two census years, there was an increase in Huntingdonshire of 5,645 acres (8 per cent.) in the area under corn crops, of 384 acres (4 per cent.) under potatoes, of 66 acres (8 per cent.) under orchards, and of 229 acres (50 per cent.) under small fruit ; in Cambridgeshire also there were increases under each heading, amounting to 15,079 acres (7 per cent.) under corn crops, 4,764 acres (19 per cent.) under potatoes, 2,907 acres (90 per cent.) under orchards, and 3,350 acres (90 per cent.) under small fruit.

There were altogether twenty-five counties in which the recorded rate of increase for male farm workers was above the average for England and Wales, and in nearly every case the increase of workers is associated with an increase either in some branch of tillage or in dairying. The exceptional cases, in which the agricultural statistics do not harmonise with the census statistics, are London (where the figures are admittedly of no statistical value), Cardiganshire, Carmarthenshire, Denbighshire, and Pembrokeshire. Eight of these twenty-five counties are classified by the Board of Agriculture as " arable " and seventeen as " grazing " counties, and a comparison of the area under the principal crops and of the " milking herd," as returned in 1901 and 1911 respectively, for these counties is made in the following table :—

The numbers between the ages of 10 and 14 decreased from 18,457 in 1901 to 9,158 in 1911—part of the decrease being due to the smaller number returned as farmers' relatives, which declined from 2,147 to 1,267. At 14 there was also a decrease from 25,861 to 23,276, but this occurred in spite of an increase from 3,608 to 4,128 in the number of farmers' relatives. The numbers returned in 1911 at ages 10 and under 13 were quite inconsiderable, 544 in all; at age 13 the number was 8,614, and at age 14, where the principal influx takes place, it rose to 23,276. The 1891 figures for these ages separately are not available, but for the whole five years 10-15 the decline between 1891 and 1911 has amounted to 33,351. The considerable decrease in the totals between 1891 and 1901 affected every age-group, but, apart from the influence of the restriction of juvenile labour, was naturally felt most acutely at the age-period 15-25, youths commencing work seeking some other form of employment; the reduction was least apparent at the age-group 35-45, but beyond that age the decrease became progressively greater. The increase in the totals between 1901 and 1911 was limited to the ages 15-55. Under 15 the number again showed a substantial reduction, and at the advanced ages, particularly over 75, there was a large falling-off, possibly owing to a greater proportion having retired from active work on account of the provision of Old Age Pensions. Comparison of the numbers enumerated at successive ages in 1911 with those returned as ten years younger in 1901 gives the following result, and suggests that a good many of the younger men leave farm work, and that some probably return to it later in life, as on leaving the army.

The figures for female farm workers will not be discussed in detail for several reasons. These include the want of comparability of the numbers of female relatives returned at successive censuses as assisting in the work of the farm (see page xlv.) and the uncertainty as to how far the domestic occupations of such persons should discount their classification as farm workers. There is also the probability of some confusion in the returns between Farm Servants and Domestic Servants on Farms. Taking the figures for 1911, however, as they stand, it is interesting to notice how widely the proportions of female to male workers vary in different parts of the country. The ratio of female to male relatives of farmers returned as assisting in the work of the farm, and of female to male farm servants in the several counties is shown in the following table :—

Agricultural Machine Proprietors and Attendants increased from 6,545 to 7,346, or by 12·2 per cent., as compared with 40 per cent. in the previous intercensal period. The figures do not represent the actual rate at which the use of machinery has increased, since many farmers use their own machines; they do, however, give some indication of the extent to which labour has been supplemented by the use of hired machinery and attendants. In the arable counties (as defined in the table on page xlix), the numbers of agricultural machine proprietors and attendants rose from 3,558 to 4,103, or by 15·3 per cent., and in the grazing counties from 2,987 to 3,243, or by 8·6 per cent.; among the latter, Lancashire, which was the only county in England and Wales in which the number of farm workers actually declined, showed the greatest relative increase among agricultural machine proprietors and attendants, whose numbers rose from 79 in 1901 to 167 in 1911.

Market Gardeners, Other Gardeners (not Domestic), Nurserymen, Seedsmen, Florists numbered 144,305 in 1911, against 128,229 in 1901, an increase of 12·5 per cent. The actual rate of increase for this class, is, however, probably greater than the recorded rate. As shown on page xlv. the numbers classified under the heading "Domestic Gardener" rose from 87,936 in 1901 to 118,842 in 1911, and some part of this apparent increase was undoubtedly due to more definite return at the later census. Taking the total number of persons working in gardens, whether in market gardens, nursery gardens, or in domestic service, the increase appears to have been from 216,165 to 263,147, or 21·7 per cent. The counties having the largest numbers in 1911 classified under the heading "Nurserymen, Seedsmen, and Florists" (from which are excluded, as far as possible, Florists who are only shopkeepers or shop assistants), were Middlesex (3,750), Hertfordshire (2,186), Surrey (2,147), Sussex (2,135), Kent (1,994), and Essex (1,692); the counties with the largest numbers classified as "Market Gardeners (including Labourers)" were Worcestershire (3,550), Hampshire (2,122), Middlesex (2,062), Yorkshire, West Riding (1,900), Sussex (1,828), Lancashire (1,799), Gloucestershire (1,744), Bedfordshire (1,715), Kent (1,591), Norfolk (1,562), and Cheshire (1,455). These figures are, however, incomplete owing to the number of persons included under the heading "Other Gardeners (not Domestic)," who would have been classified under one of the two former headings had the returns been more definite. They also fail to represent the total numbers engaged in the cultivation of fruit, vegetables, and flowers, both on account of the impossibility of separating completely such persons from those engaged in ordinary farm work (see page xlviii), and on account of the casual labourers (fruit pickers, pea pickers, etc.), who would mostly be returned according to the occupations they were following at the date of the census. The total numbers returned as market gardeners, other non-domestic gardeners, and nurserymen in the above-mentioned counties are shown in the following table:—

The industry tables show that in the employ of "Nurserymen, Seedsmen, Florists" there were 960 carmen, etc., 246 messengers, porters, watchmen, and 604 male and 144 female commercial clerks. The additional workers employed by "Market Gardeners" included 836 carmen.

The number of Woodmen rose from 12,035 in 1901 to 12,303 in 1911, or by only 2·2 per cent., having increased from 9,448, or by 27·4 per cent., in the previous ten years. The area of woods and plantations was 1,788,816 acres in 1891, and it increased by 58,535 acres during the succeeding four years; in the next ten years only 52,483 acres were added, giving a total of 1,899,834 acres in 1905; and by 1908, the last year for which the figures are available, the area had increased to 1,907,053 acres.

Proportion of Agricultural to Total Population.—The growth of the agricultural population relatively to the growth of the total population in the several counties was alluded to in Volume I. of our Report (page xv.), and we are now enabled to give comparative figures for each county, both as a whole (including any associated county boroughs) and for the aggregate of the rural districts situated in it. A comparison made in the 1901 Report (page 102) of the proportions of the male population aged ten years and upwards engaged in agriculture at the censuses of 1881, 1891, and 1901 showed that with but few slight exceptions there had been a continued decrease in every registration county; that between 1891 and 1901 the only exception to the general decrease was Flintshire, where the proportions were 136 and 137 per 1,000 respectively at the two censuses; and that in 1881 there were 18 counties in which the proportion had exceeded 30 per cent., while in 1901 there were only 8. In order to obtain these comparative figures farmers' relatives under 15 years of age had to be excluded from, and domestic gardeners included in, the totals, but in making the similar comparison between 1901 and 1911 it is not necessary to adjust the totals in this manner. In 1901, moreover, it was necessary to use the registration county as the unit of area for comparative purposes, as tabulation by administrative counties was first introduced at that census (see also page xii.). It may be remarked that especially in counties where immigration has been active on account of industrial development or of increased popularity for residential purposes, a decreased proportion of agriculturists may result from that cause, and may not be due to an actual decline in agricultural employment.

The table shows that while the proportion in England and Wales dropped from 88 to 83 per 1,000, there were eleven counties in which the proportion increased, though in each of these counties the rate of growth of the total population was below that for the country as a whole. The eight counties (Cambridgeshire, Herefordshire, Huntingdonshire, Rutlandshire, Anglesey, Cardiganshire, Montgomeryshire, and Radnorshire) which in 1901 had upwards of 30 per cent. of their males over 10 years of age engaged in agriculture, all showed increased proportions in 1911 with the exception of Rutlandshire. Taking the rural districts only, there were 34 counties in which the proportion in 1901 was 30 per cent. or upwards, the number in 1911 being reduced to 30. There were in all 20 counties in which the proportions in the rural districts were higher in 1911 than in 1901, and in many other cases the decrease was but slight.

The following table shows all the counties which in 1911 had more than 20 per cent. of their male population over 10 years of age engaged in agriculture ; the proportions in 1901 and the increase or decrease per cent. of the general population in the two periods 1891-1901 and 1901-1911 are added for comparison :—

Among the first seven counties (those with proportions of over 30 per cent.) all the rural aggregates showed increased proportions of agricultural population. The figures for Radnorshire at the two censuses are not comparable owing to the presence in 1901 of a large number of persons connected with the construction of waterworks for the City of Birmingham ; but in each of the six other counties in this group it will be observed that the decrease in the general population of the rural districts between 1891 and 1901 was much reduced in the following ten years, and in three cases was converted into an actual increase ; a similar improvement was shown for the total areas of the same counties, except in the case of Anglesey, where the rate of increase fell from 1·0 to 0·6 per cent.

In the second group, consisting of the 14 counties with from 20 to 30 per cent. of their male population engaged in agriculture, the rural aggregates showed increased proportions in seven cases, and in all 14 counties, with one exception, the growth of the general population of the rural districts was greater or its decrease less in the later than in the earlier intercensal period. The exception was Merionethshire, where the decrease of 4·4 per cent., as against 3·0 in the preceding period, may be due to decline in slate quarrying. Among the seven counties in which the agricultural population in the rural aggregates showed proportional decreases, the fall in Suffolk, Oxfordshire, Wiltshire, and Dorsetshire was but slight ; in the other three cases, Lincolnshire, Brecknockshire, and Buckinghamshire, it was accompanied by a considerable rise in the total population of the rural districts, which in Lincolnshire is connected with industrial activity, in Brecknockshire with mining, and in Buckinghamshire with suburban development.

VIII. Fishing—The fishermen enumerated either on shore or on vessels which were in port on census night, or arrived there the following morning, comprise the Eighth Order, numbering 25,239, as compared with 23,891 in 1901 and 25,225 in 1891. A complete statement of the numbers actually engaged in fishing cannot, however, be obtained by means of the ordinary census, owing to the prolonged absence from their homes of the crews of many of the fishing vessels. According to estimates made by Officers of Customs, in conformity with instructions issued by the Board of Trade (Annual Statement of Navigation and Shipping of the United Kingdom, 1911), the number of men and boys regularly employed in 1911 on sea-fishing boats registered in ports in England and Wales was 37,224 ; and the number of persons occasionally employed was 7,057 ; in 1901 the corresponding estimates were 31,583 and 7,983 respectively. Both the census figures and the Board of Trade's estimate indicate an increase in the fishing industry, which is also shown by the return of the quantity and value of the fish landed on the English and Welsh coasts—the quantity having increased from about 8½ million cwts. in 1901 to about 14½ million cwts. in 1911. The greatest increase in the estimated number of regular fishermen at one port has been at Lowestoft, where the numbers were 3,490 in 1901 and 5,400 in 1911. The enumerated numbers showed increases in all the east coast counties, from the East Riding of Yorkshire southwards, and decreases in the south-western counties.

The industry tables show that in addition to the 25,239 fishermen, there were 4,118 persons who were definitely returned as being engaged on fishing boats or in the employ of fishermen, fishing boat owners, trawling companies, etc. They included 2,500 seamen (1,953 engineers, firemen, trimmers, etc., and 547 cooks, etc.), 194 harbour, dock, wharf, etc. officials, 124 dock labourers, wharf labourers, 180 commercial clerks, 179 males engaged in general engineering and machine making, and 146 in ship and boat building, besides 297 females engaged in canvas, sailcloth, sacking, net, etc. manufacture. There were also a further 2,305 males and 839 females who were returned so indefinitely that it could not be determined whether they were employed in connexion with the catching of fish, whether they were in the service of fish curers or fish merchants, or, more especially in the case of females, whether they were employed by firms engaged in fishing or were simply making articles to be used in fishing. These indefinitely returned workers included 1,307 dock labourers, wharf labourers, 276 general labourers, and 831 females engaged in canvas, sailcloth, sacking, net, etc. manufacture.

IX. Persons Working in and about, and Working and Dealing in the Products of, Mines and Quarries.—The number of males included in this Order was 1,039,083, and the number of females only 5,511. The whole of the workers, as distinct from the dealers, are now shown in the first sub-order, and numbered 1,014,404 (1,010,834 males and 3,570 females), against 778,072 (774,187 males and 3,885 females) in 1901 ; the rate of increase for both sexes together was 30·4 per cent., the males having increased by 30·6 per cent., while the females decreased by 8·1 per cent. The two sub-orders of this Order have been re-arranged at this census, and now relate to "Workers" and "Dealers" respectively. These titles will prevent any misunderstanding which may have arisen from the designations "Mines" and "Quarries" used at previous censuses, when these sub-orders included respectively (a) miners, quarriers, and other workers in minerals obtained principally from mines (not exclusively workers in mines under the Coal Mines and Metalliferous Mines Regulation Acts), and (b) workers in minerals obtained principally from quarries (not all workers in quarries under the Quarries Act). In the census classification it is impracticable to make the distinction as between all workers in mines and all workers in quarries, and we have therefore been compelled to group together both the miners and quarriers of a particular mineral—as is shown by the headings "Iron—Miners, Quarriers," "Stone—Miners, Quarriers," and "Slate—Miners, Quarriers."

The following table shows the numbers of males working in "Mines" (as used in the above sense) from 1851 onwards, together with the percentages of increase or decrease in the intercensal periods ending 1891, 1901, and 1911 :—

NOTE.—In comparing the figures under the several headings regard must be paid to the fluctuating numbers shown under "Other or Undefined Minerals"; and to the fact that the figures for 1851, 1861, and 1871 include the "Retired."

Coal Miners.—The workers in and about Coal Mines account for 85 per cent. of the total in the Order, and have been classified at the present census under five headings, as follows :—

	Males.
Coal and Shale Mine—Workers at the face	503,294
—Other Workers below ground ...	278,924
Total below ground ...	782,218	874,304
—Workers above ground	92,086
—Owners, Agents, Managers ...	6,302
—Other Mine Service	3,924
Total	884,530

In 1901, Coal and Shale Mine—Workers (except Owners, Agents, Managers, and Others in Mine Service who were not shown separately for coal as distinct from other mines) were returned under three headings, as follows :—

	Males.
Coal and Shale Mine—Hewers	409,529
—Other Workers below ground ...	178,915
Total below ground ...	588,444
—Workers above ground	52,545

The figures under the several headings in various localities indicate that the proportions of workers below ground and above ground respectively at the two censuses are not comparable in all cases; no distinction of this kind had been made prior to 1901, and it is probable that at the first attempt the returns were less reliable than in 1911. Taking both classes of workers together, and omitting Owners, Agents, Managers, and "Others" in Mine Service, the males increased from 640,989 to 874,304, or by 36·4 per cent. The females have risen from 2,665 to 2,843, and were nearly all enumerated in Lancashire and Cumberland, the numbers at the two censuses being :—

	1901.	1911.
Lancashire	2,033	2,378
Cumberland	225	308
Remainder of England and Wales ...	407	157
	2,665	2,843

Coal Mining is carried on in a large number of counties, and from the following statement of the numbers in the principal centres of the industry it will be seen that the increase is widely, though unequally, distributed.

In the Reports of the Chief Inspector of Mines the workers employed at Coal Mines in England and Wales in 1901 and 1911 are given as follows :—

Year.	Males.			Females.
	Underground.	Above Ground.	Total.	Above Ground.
1901 ...	552,622	134,140	686,762	3,384
1911 ...	742,584	171,802	914,386	3,407

These figures show an increase of 33·1 per cent., which is rather less than that shown by the census figures. The difference between the two returns may be accounted for by the inclusion in the Home Office totals, but not in the census totals, of persons working on sidings at the pits, and on private branch railways and tramways, and coking coal. The Home Office return shows that the output of coal in England and Wales rose from 186,147,116 tons in 1901 to 230,089,172 tons in 1911, an increase of 23·6 per cent. Thus, relatively to the numbers employed, the output was smaller in 1911 than in 1901—a decrease which may be attributed partly to the reduction in the working hours effected by the Coal Mines Regulation Act, 1908.

The total number of persons following any occupation in connexion with coal mining is shown by the tabulation of the information furnished in the industry column (column 11) of the census schedule to have amounted to 971,293 (968,108 males and 3,185 females), which, it will be seen, is in excess of the number shown in the Home Office return. In addition to the 884,530 males who were classified in the occupation tables under the headings relating to coal mines, there were 83,578 other workers following various occupations in connexion with this industry. These "additional workers" in the industry included 27,296 engine—drivers, stokers, firemen (not railway); 10,091 blacksmiths, strikers; 5,515 erectors, fitters, turners, and their labourers; 2,130 electricians, etc.; 5,704 carpenters, joiners, and their labourers*; 2,996 bricklayers and their labourers; 1,534 masons and their labourers; 1,089 mine sinkers, borers; 1,102 sawyers, wood cutting machinists; 1,275 railway—coach, wagon makers; 4,919 railway men; 2,923 carmen, etc.; and 8,310 commercial clerks.

The above numbers are exclusive of coal merchants, coal dealers, and their various employees—coalheavers, carmen, clerks, travellers, etc.—who numbered altogether 65,312.

Iron Miners, Quarriers.—The male workers in and about Iron Mines and Quarries increased from 17,008 to 22,299, or by 31·1 per cent., this increase following a decline of 6·3 per cent. in 1891-1901 and of 29·8 per cent. in 1881-1891. The principal iron-mining counties and the numbers of males engaged in the industry were as follows :—

The Home Office returns give the output of iron-ore as 14,773,843 tons in 1911, against 11,435,293 tons in 1901, an increase of 29·2 per cent.

Tin Miners.—The males engaged in Tin Mining—an industry which is confined to Cornwall and an adjacent part of Devonshire—who had declined in number at each successive census from 1871 to 1901, showed an increase of 8·3 per cent. between 1901 and 1911, the numbers having risen from 6,577 to 7,125. The number of females, which had been 1,279 in 1891 and 381 in 1901, fell to 159 in 1911. The Home Office returns show an increase in the output of "Tin Ore (Dressed)" from 7,288 tons in 1901 to 7,746 in 1911, or of 6·3 per cent.

Lead Miners.—The Lead Mining industry has shown continuous decline since 1851, the decrease between 1901 and 1911 in the number of male workers being from 4,375 to 2,968, or 32·2 per cent. The largest numbers of lead miners were enumerated in Derbyshire (297), Durham (343), Cumberland (439), Cardiganshire (463), and Flintshire (494); in the last-named county the number in 1901 had been 963, while in Denbighshire, which had contained 525 in 1901, the number declined to 170.

Copper Mine workers numbered only 279, as compared with 789 in 1901, the enormous decrease in this industry since 1861 being apparent from the table on page lvii. Miners in other or undefined minerals numbered only 1,784, against 2,457 in 1901.

Summary of Mining Industries.—The numbers classified in the occupation tables as working in and about mines (including mine owners, agents, managers, etc.), together with the numbers of "additional workers" as shown by the industry tables, are summarised in the following statement :—

	MALES.

Copper and other Metalliferous Mines (including undefined)	2,329	292	2,621
Total	919,710	87,570	1,007,280

* This number does not include persons returned simply as "Pitwrights," who at this census have been classed to Order IX.: at previous censuses such persons had been classed as "Carpenters, Joiners."

Stone—Miners, Quarriers; and Stone—Cutters, Dressers.—The males classed under these two headings together numbered 46,784, against 55,756 in 1901, an apparent decrease of 16·1 per cent. The two totals are, however, not strictly comparable. On the one hand, the figure for 1901 includes Agents and Managers (whose numbers would not seriously affect the comparison); on the other hand, the figure for 1911 includes many quarry masons and employees at stone works, who, with the less detailed information obtained in 1901, were classed to the heading "Mason" in Order XII.; it is probable, therefore, that the real decline is somewhat greater than is indicated by the figures. The local distribution of the industry may be summarised as follows :—

STONE—MINERS, QUARRIERS, CUTTERS, DRESSERS (MALES).

"Slate Miners, Quarriers," "Slate Workers."—Under the first heading were classified 10,763 males, and under the second, 2,484 males and 111 females; the total of 13,247 males being 17·5 per cent. less than the 16,064 so classified in 1901, when, however, the total included a small number of Agents and Managers. Nearly five-sixths of the total were enumerated in Carnarvonshire and Merionethshire, where the numbers at the two censuses were as follows :—

	1901.	1911.	Decrease per cent.
Carnarvonshire ...	9,108	8,198	10·0
Merionethshire ...	3,895	2,820	27·6

Clay, Sand, Gravel, Chalk—Pit, etc. Workers increased from 10,258 males to 13,546, or by 32·1 per cent. The figures for the several counties show great variations. In Cornwall the numbers increased from 2,906 to 4,173, while in Kent—which contained the next highest number in 1901—they decreased from 1,157 to 989. Lime-burners have decreased from 2,917 males to 2,303, or by 21·0 per cent.

Taking all the male miners, quarriers and other workers in minerals principally obtained from quarries (as grouped in 1901 under the sub-order "Quarries"), the total was 81,264, or less by 6·2 per cent. than the 86,620 returned under the corresponding headings in 1901.

Summary of "Quarrying" Industries.—By the inclusion of all the additional workers shown in the industry tables the total number of males in this group is raised to 89,322; of this total, 2,172 stone quarriers, cutters, and dressers, and 3,279 clay, sand, gravel, chalk—pit, etc. workers, were returned as employed in connexion with other industries, 1,998 of the latter being employed by brickmaking firms, 598 in connexion with plaster, cement manufacture, and 390 with earthenware, china, etc. manufacture.

X. Metals, Machines, Implements, and Conveyances.—The number of persons comprised in this Order was 1,578,147 (1,477,097 males and 101,050 females), compared with 1,286,714 (1,221,208 males and 65,506 females) in 1901; the latter numbers include, for the purpose of comparison, electrical apparatus makers and fitters who at that census were classed in Order XI. Omitting dealers, the males increased from 1,189,923 to 1,434,289, or by 20·5 per cent., and the females from 62,321 to 95,069, or by 52·5 per cent. As it is not possible to compare some of the sub-orders with those at previous censuses, this order will be considered in four sections—(a) Metals, Machines, Implements, (b) Electrical Apparatus, (c) Ships and Boats, and (d) Vehicles.

(a) Metals, Machines, and Implements.—The first section comprises the sub-orders numbered 1 to 3 and 5 to 8 in the present classification, and shows the lowest rate of increase, viz. :—13·7 per cent. for males and 38·0 per cent. for females. Between 1891 and 1901 the numbers in the same group (excluding lock and key makers and gas fittings makers) showed an increase of 26·6 per cent. for males and of 29·4 per cent. for females. In the last decennial period the rate of increase has been very unequal in different parts of the country, many counties showing only a small increase or even an actual decrease. The following table shows the distribution of male and female workers among the several counties, excluding those which contained fewer than three thousand persons in these occupations in 1911 :—

It will be seen from the table how large a proportion of these workers in engineering and metal trades is found in a few counties; of the males, more than half were in Yorkshire, Lancashire, Staffordshire, and Warwickshire, and these counties, together with London and Worcestershire, accounted for 88 per cent. of the female workers. In London the decrease of 7·6 per cent. in the period may be partly attributed to movement of population into the surrounding counties, each of which showed an increase. In Durham and Northumberland the numbers were practically stationary, but in all the other counties where large numbers are employed there were increases. It is, however, in some of the counties where the numbers employed are not so great that the highest rates of increase are shown, e.g., in Flintshire (92·0 per cent.), Bedfordshire (57·1 per cent.), Northamptonshire (53·3 per cent.), Leicestershire (50·0 per cent.), Lincolnshire (48·5 per cent.), and Carmarthenshire (47·8 per cent.). The numbers of females employed increased in nearly all counties, but there was a marked difference in the rates of increase for Lancashire (97·4 per cent.) and for Staffordshire (58·1 per cent.), compared with those in Warwickshire (12·6 per cent.), in Yorkshire, West Riding (19·5 per cent.), or even in Worcestershire (23·3. per cent.); in London, although the males decreased by nearly 9,000, the females increased by nearly 3,000, or by 84·6 per cent. In the remaining counties the numbers of females were too small to furnish comparable rates of increase, but they indicate considerable development in Cheshire, Essex, Middlesex, Northumberland, Nottinghamshire, and Yorkshire (East Riding).

Comparison of the numbers of workers under the several headings included in section (a) will not be made in detail, for while the whole group may be regarded as comparable at the two censuses, alterations in the method of return, of which the more definite information as to labourers may be cited as an example, as well as some alterations in classification, may have affected the numbers under the single headings. The fuller information afforded by the industry inquiry (column 11 of the schedule) has had the effect of adding largely to some of the occupations, such as iron and steel manufacture, in which many labourers are employed; but, on the other hand, some headings have lost by the more definite return. Thus the heading "blacksmiths, strikers," which includes smiths for whom the returns do not specify the trade in which they were engaged, will have been reduced to the extent by which the returns have been improved in this respect. Similarly with the heading "iron-founders"; moulders, casters, dressers, who without further description are classified under this heading, have been classified, on the information given in column 11 that they were engaged in making iron goods (not heavy castings), to headings covering the special kind of iron goods made, e.g., "Stove, Grate, Range, Fire Iron—Makers," "Bedstead Makers," and "Other Iron Goods Makers," the latter including Hollow-ware Manufacture. Changes such as these in the method of return have affected the figures under some headings to an extent which it is impossible to estimate.

Difficulties in classification may also be responsible for considerable differences in the numbers under the headings for producers of the metals, as distinct from workers in the metals. The separation of the producers from the workers in the metals was attempted for the first time in 1901. In the Report on that census it was stated that "the persistent efforts made, both before the census was taken and subsequently by local inquiry, to ensure completeness and accuracy of returns have been only partially successful." The same may be said at this census, and further experience leads to the conclusion that complete separation cannot be attained, not only owing to incompleteness of description in the census schedules and to the general looseness of occupational nomenclature, but also to the organization of industry. In many cases the production of the metals and the manufacture of commodities from the metals are carried on in the same works, and a distinction between the two classes of workers is, therefore, impracticable.

For these reasons, in comparing the numbers in 1901 and 1911 of workers in Iron and Steel, the sub-order arrangement of the main tables is not adhered to, the producers of the metal (X. 1) and a representative group of workers being brought together in the following summary:—

* This heading, which includes workers in other metals than iron, is added because "Galvanized Sheet Manufacture" and "Other Iron Goods—Makers" were not separated from "Other Metal Workers" in 1901.

The above group, with an aggregate of nearly half a million males, the great bulk of whom are workers in Iron and Steel, showed an increase of 11·5 per cent. for males in 1901-1911, against an increase of 9·8 per cent. in 1891-1901; in the case of females the rate of increase was 19·4 per cent., against 21·9 per cent., but it will be seen from the table that the heading "Other Metal Workers," which had to be included for purposes of comparison, comprises an appreciable proportion of the total number of females.

The increase recorded by the table in sub-order X. 1, "Iron and Steel Manufacture," was equal to nearly 45 per cent., but some part of this is due to the reduction in the number of Iron Workers (undefined) and to the improved returns of labourers. If, however, all the undefined iron workers were assumed to belong to this sub-order, the rate of increase would still be as high as 26·7 per cent. It should be noted that there is some uncertainty in comparing the numbers at the two censuses under the several headings in this sub-order, not only on account of the undefined iron workers, but also from the possibility of differences of classification at the two censuses owing to the actual overlapping of occupations coming under different headings. In some cases it was extremely difficult to distinguish between Pig Iron Manufacture and Iron Founding carried on in proximity to it. The local distribution of Pig Iron Manufacture, as derived from the returns, shows that of the total of 21,698 males, 7,801 were enumerated in the North Riding of Yorkshire, 2,127 in Durham, 1,806 in Staffordshire, 1,705 in Cumberland, 1,310 in Derbyshire, 1,230 in Northamptonshire, 1,087 in Lancashire, and 1,060 in Lincolnshire; all these counties showing considerable increase on the numbers recorded in 1901, except Lancashire, where, in exception to the general rule, there was an increase in the number of Iron Workers (undefined). Iron and Steel Tube Manufacture, which was shown separately in the tables for the first time at this census, was carried on mainly in Staffordshire, where it employed 4,772 males, in Worcestershire (1,331 males), and in Warwickshire (1,117 males). The largest numbers of males under the heading "Puddling Furnaces; Iron and Steel Rolling Mills" were recorded in Staffordshire (14,867), Yorkshire, West Riding (13,562), Lancashire (5,064), Durham (4,757), Monmouthshire (4,107), Yorkshire, North Riding (2,510), and Worcestershire (2,414); in all these counties the numbers classed under this and the preceding heading were together considerably greater than the numbers under the equivalent single heading in 1901, the most striking increases being in Yorkshire, West Riding, where the number rose from 6,612 to 13,934, and Monmouthshire, where it rose from 1,712 to 4,107. Steel—Manufacture, Smelting, Founding, gave employment to 17,713 males in Yorkshire, West Riding (against 10,896 in 1901), to 3,906 in Yorkshire, North Riding, to 3,818 in Glamorganshire, and to 3,611 in Durham.

In addition to the 124,231 males who are classified by their occupations as engaged in the manufacture of iron and steel, the industry tables show that there were 3,036 classed to Ironworkers (undefined) because the branch of iron or steel manufacture in which they were engaged was not stated, and no fewer than 39,334 males classified under other headings in the occupation tables, but connected with this industry, while, on the other hand, 1,764 males engaged in the manufacture of the metal were working in connexion with other industrial concerns. The net total number of males, therefore, who were returned as working in and in connexion with the manufacture of iron and steel, as distinct from those engaged in mining and quarrying the ore, was 164,837. The 39,334 additional workers comprised 6,649 engine drivers, stokers, firemen (not railway), 5,169 erectors, fitters, turners, and their labourers, 2,600 blacksmiths, strikers, 915 boiler makers, 494 pattern makers, 434 millwrights, 301 metal machinists, 257 ironfounders, 1,347 "others" in general engineering and machine making, 1,017 electrical apparatus makers and fitters, 3,016 bricklayers and their labourers, and 876 carpenters, joiners, and their labourers; there were also 6,001 commercial clerks, 5,089 engaged in transport services (including 3,060 on railways, 1,354 on roads, and 675 on seas, rivers, canals, and in docks), 1213 messengers, porters, etc., and 732 chemists and others classified as "engaged in scientific pursuits."

The heading "Ironfounders," which had been given for the first time in 1901, then comprised 100,217 males, and in 1911 the number had increased only to 102,191, or by 2·0 per cent. The recorded increase, however, falls short of the actual increase. For although, on the one hand, the 1911 total includes a number of labourers who would not have been included on account of indefinite returns in 1901, yet, on the other hand, the 1901 total includes a much larger number of men who, owing to the more precise returns in 1911, are now included under the headings for their special products, and, as already stated, the additional information as to the nature of the employer's business furnished in column 11 of the schedule has enabled more of the ironfounders employed in various manufactures (stoves and grates for example), to be shown under the heading for those manufactures than was formerly the case. The term "foundry" is used, especially in some parts of the country, to describe general engineering works, and the difficulty of classifying ironfounders in such districts was met to some extent by sending inquiries to the local registrars and tabulating according to the information received. Notwithstanding the differences of classification, there were considerable increases under the heading "Ironfounders" in some counties, though in Lancashire, where the largest numbers were enumerated, there was a decrease. The largest numbers were returned in the following counties:—

Lancashire	29,928	26,638
Yorkshire (West Riding) ...	15,667	15,708
Staffordshire	7,853	8,798
Derbyshire	5,583	6,093
Durham	4,656	5,361

The whole of the increase under this heading occurred at the age-groups 25- and upwards.

The industry tables show that in addition to the 102,191 males classified as "ironfounders," there were 18,081 males connected with general iron founding businesses; these included 4,395 erectors, fitters, turners, and their labourers, 2,776 blacksmiths, strikers, 1,805 metal machinists, 1,342 patternmakers, 1,187 engine drivers, stokers, firemen (not railway), 1,982 commercial clerks, 864 carmen, etc., and 553 messengers, porters, watchmen. On the other hand, in addition to the ironfounders included in the occupation tables under the various manufactures with which they were connected, a further 31,040 are shown by the industry tables not to be employed in iron founding businesses, this total including 26,559 employed in government, railway, and other engineering and machine making works.

"Blacksmiths, Strikers" showed a decline from 136,752 males in 1901 to 125,305 in 1911, equal to 8·4 per cent., but the apparent decline is probably accounted for to a large extent by the transfer to other headings of smiths who were returned in such manner that they could be classified to the manufactures in which they were engaged. It may be noted that, apart from the ages 10-15, the greatest proportional decline was recorded at ages 15-25, and probably indicates a real decrease in the numbers entering the occupation; at all age-groups 35- and upwards there was either an actual increase or a slight decrease, which may be wholly due to differences in the method of return.

The occupation "Blacksmith" is one which is found in connexion with many different industries, and out of a total of 125,305 males shown under this heading as many as 61,101 are assigned in the industry tables to the businesses carried on by their employers. Thus, 17,099 were employed in iron foundries, in boiler making, or in engineering or machine making works, 10,091 in connexion with coal mines, 2,947 in railway coach, wagon making, or in tram car making, 740 in motor car making, 2,244 in the construction of coaches, carriages, and other vehicles, 5,514 in shipbuilding works, 3,640 on railways, and 2,600 in iron and steel manufacture.

The numbers engaged in Nail Manufacture, which had been 26,940 (16,965 males and 9,975 females) in 1851, have continuously declined, until in 1901 only 5,767 persons (3,163 males and 2,604 females) were returned, and by 1911 they had further fallen to 4,610 (2,925 males and 1,685 females). This manufacture is localised mainly in Worcestershire and Staffordshire, and to a smaller extent in Warwickshire and Yorkshire, West Riding, the numbers returned in these four counties at the last two censuses being as follows :—

——	Persons.		Males.		Females.
					Unmarried.		Married and Widowed.	Married	Widowed.

Yorkshire (West Riding)	529	422	327	278	148	83	54	36	25

The manufacture of Bolts, Nuts, Rivets, Screws, and Staples, in contrast to Nail Manufacture, showed a very large increase in the last intercensal period, the numbers having risen from 12,181 (7,727 males and 4,454 females) to 17,838 (10,456 males and 7,382 females), or by 35·3 per cent. for males and by 65·7 per cent. for females. The local distribution is similar to that for Nail Manufacture, the figures for the principal counties being as follows :—

——	Persons.		Males.		Females.
					Unmarried.		Married and Widowed.	Married	Widowed.

In connexion with the manufacture of bolts, nuts, rivets, etc., the additional workers numbered 2,605 males and 242 females; these included tool makers (731 males), erectors, fitters, turners, and their labourers (467 males), blacksmiths, strikers (194 males), and commercial clerks (587 males and 134 females). The 17,838 persons classified to the heading " bolt, nut, rivet, etc. makers " included 996 males and 111 females connected with other industries ; of these 569 males were employed in connexion with iron founding, boiler making, or engineering and machine making.

The manufacture of Anchors and heavy Chains (buoy or mooring chains, chain cable, open link chain, short link chain, shackle, steering chain, stud cable, twist chain, etc.) is carried on almost exclusively in Staffordshire and Worcestershire (mainly in Cradley Heath and the neighbourhood) ; out of a total of 6,668 persons returned in 1901 and 7,323 in 1911, these two counties contained 5,694 and 6,550 respectively. Details at the two censuses were as follows :—

——	Persons.		Males.		Females.
					Unmarried.		Married and Widowed.	Married	Widowed.

More than two-thirds of the females were returned as working " at home."

Bedstead Manufacture (iron or brass) was returned as employing 6,157 persons (4,675 males and 1,482 females) in 1911, against 4,220 persons (3,178 males and 1,042 females) in 1901. The numbers for the three counties in which most of the bedstead makers were enumerated were :—

——	Persons.		Males.		Females.
					Unmarried.		Married and Widowed.	Married	Widowed.

An attempt has been made at this census to ascertain the numbers engaged in the manufacture of galvanized sheets, but there has been great difficulty in distinguishing the workers in this manufacture, and it is probable that the 4,830 males and 14 females classified under the heading do not fully represent the numbers engaged. The returns show that the principal seats of this industry were Cheshire (1,728 males), Monmouthshire (840 males), Glamorganshire (523 males), Flintshire (486 males) and Staffordshire (343 males).

The sub-order " General Engineering and Machine Making " comprised a total of 675,298 persons, of whom 670,412 were males. Adding to these the 2,488 males and 190 females under the heading " Roller Engravers, etc.," which formed a part of the heading " Other or undefined Engine and Machine Makers " in 1901, there was a total of 677,976 persons, as compared with 629,026 persons (626,263 males and 2,763 females) in 1901. A better measure of the growth of employment in general engineering and machine making can, however, be obtained by excluding " Ironfounders " and " Blacksmiths, Strikers," for the reasons already stated, and also the numbers under the headings " Brassfounders," " Brass Finishers," and " Coppersmiths," the 1901 figures being much less reliable than those of 1911. Even the latter, however, are not above suspicion as to their accuracy, owing to the extreme difficulty of separating such workers from manufacturers of the metals and other workers in the metals, the terms " Brassfounders " and " Brass Foundry " being apparently largely used by workers in factories where no brass founding was carried on, but stamped goods only were made. The 1911 figures for the remaining headings, together with the numbers returned in 1901, were as follows :—

The males in this group, as a whole, have increased by 65,006, or by 18·5 per cent., but some part of the increase is due to the inclusion of more labourers, owing to better returns ; on the other hand, the improvement of the returns has doubtless resulted also in transfer to other headings, such as " Railway Coach, Wagon Makers," and there has, moreover, naturally been a transfer of workers formerly engaged in " General Engineering and Machine Making " to the heading " Motor Car Chassis Makers, Motor Car Mechanics." Between 1891 and 1901 the occupations included in Table XXVIII. had shown an increase of 68·6 per cent. for males, but this rate was probably much in excess of the true increase owing to greater precision of the returns. The number of females has risen during the last intercensal period from 1,522 to 4,439. As will be seen from the table, 2,462 of the latter total were engaged in the manufacture of textile machinery fittings, etc., women being employed in making the fittings for textile machines and in making the small parts and fittings of other machines. The local distribution of Engineering and Machine Making and its relative increase are indicated by the following figures, which show the numbers of males included in this group in some of the principal counties, containing in the aggregate more than three-quarters of the total for the whole country :—

The age-distribution of the males in this group shows that, in spite of the considerable increase in the numbers, the proportions at the age-groups up to and including 25-35 are lower than in 1901, but that, compared with the proportions for all occupied males, there is an excess at each of the three age-groups 15-20, 20-25, and 25-35. The figures are as follows :—

		Proportion per 1,000 aged 10 and upwards.

In Lancashire the very considerable decline at the census of 1901 in the number of males between the ages of 15 and 25 employed in cotton factories since the previous census was observed to be associated with a large increase in the number at these ages employed in engineering and machine making ; but in 1911, although there was an increase since 1901 of upwards of 17,000 males in General Engineering and Machine Making in this county, the increase between the ages of 15 and 25 was but slight, and the proportion at these ages fell from 34·7 per cent. to 29·7 per cent. of the total. This decreased proportion is probably not unconnected with the marked recovery of the cotton industry (see Order XVIII.).

Boiler Makers, who are included in the above group, increased from 46,432 to 48,804 (exclusive of the few females classified under the heading), or at the rate of 5·1 per cent. This increase was, however, very unequally distributed, as will be seen from the following table :—

Roller Engravers, Block Cutters (for textile, etc. printing) have not been classified separately at previous censuses ; they numbered 2,488 males and 190 females, and from the industry tables it will be seen that about three-quarters of them were definitely returned as being employed in certain industries, mostly textile.

In dealing with the industry of General Engineering and Machine Making, the heading " Roller Engravers, Block Cutters " has been excluded ; but owing to the difficulty of distinguishing between Iron Foundries and Engineering Works, and to the fact that Boiler Making is closely allied with Engineering, these three industries, besides being shown separately, are grouped together in Tables 28 and 29. The occupational headings in the group as thus constituted contained 516,353 males and 4,571 females, and the number of additional workers shown by the returns to be connected with this group of industries was 68,835 males and 3,615 females, while, on the other hand, 82,246 males and 902 females classified to the occupational headings in the group were employed in connexion with other industries ; the net total employed in iron foundries, or in boiler making or general engineering and machine making works was, therefore, 502,942 males and 7,284 females.

Among the additional workers the largest numbers were commercial clerks (17,001 males and 3,054 females), blacksmiths (17,099 males), engine drivers, stokers, firemen—not railway (5,928 males), carpenters, joiners, and their labourers (3,906 males), brass finishers (3,179 males), brassfounders (1,884 males), tool makers (2,182 males), messengers, porters, watchmen (2,916 males), and carmen, etc. (1,781 males). Among the males classified to the occupational headings in this group, but employed in connexion with other industries, were 38,270 erectors, fitters, turners, and their labourers, 7,964 boiler makers, 4,279 ironfounders, 4,236 metal machinists, 2,321 millwrights, 2,051 pattern makers, 2,114 textile machinery fittings makers, and 20,745 other or undefined workers in engineering and machine making; the females included 860 textile machinery fittings makers.

The workers classed under the sub-order "Tools" numbered 62,978 persons (50,249 males and 12,729 females) in 1911, against 53,905 persons (42,892 males and 11,013 females) in 1901, thus showing an increase of 16·8 per cent. (17·2 per cent. for males and 15·6 per cent. for females). In the preceding intercensal period the total increase was at the rate of 4·4 per cent., the rate of increase for males being 1·9 and that for females 15·2 per cent. The numbers included under the several headings in this sub-order at the two censuses are shown below.

Tool Makers were returned chiefly from Warwickshire (6,870 males and 249 females), Yorkshire West Riding (5,207 males and 380 females), Staffordshire (4,591 males and 154 females), Worcestershire (2,232 males and 72 females), Lancashire (1,922 males and 11 females), and London (1,057 males and 4 females); thus, these counties together contained 87 per cent. of the males and practically all the females under this heading, and in each county the number showed a large increase since 1901. The counties containing the largest numbers of File Makers were Yorkshire West Riding (4,099 males and 1,252 females), Lancashire (527 males and 44 females), and Staffordshire (295 males and 27 females), in each of which a considerable decline was recorded. Saw Makers, and Cutlers, Scissors Makers, are localised in Yorkshire West Riding, where of the former 1,357 males and 205 females, and of the latter 12,380 males and 2,708 females were enumerated, the majority under both headings being in the City of Sheffield. Of the workers employed in Needle, Pin Manufacture, 1,013 males and 1,396 females were enumerated in Worcestershire (mostly in Redditch Urban District), 528 males and 1,242 females in Warwickshire, 127 males and 261 females in Gloucestershire, and 289 males in Leicestershire. In Warwickshire, Worcestershire, and Staffordshire, 431 males and 4,079 females were returned as engaged in Steel Pen Making, the City of Birmingham being the chief centre of the industry.

Tool, file, and saw making gave employment to 1,695 males and 224 females in addition to the numbers classified under these headings in the occupation tables; these additional workers included commercial clerks (512 males and 161 females), blacksmiths, strikers (384 males), and messengers, porters, watchmen (222 males). Tool, etc. makers to the number of 9,930 males and 40 females were employed in other industries; the largest numbers were 2,182 in general engineering and machine making, 838 in cycle making, 836 in motor car making, 731 in bolt, nut, etc. making, and 604 in electrical apparatus making. The additional workers connected with cutlery and scissors making amounted to 747 males and 323 females, and included commercial clerks (229 males and 133 females), and messengers, porters, watchmen (292 males and 146 females). Needle and pin making firms employed 391 males and 388 females in addition to those classified to the manufacture; 190 of the females were cardboard box makers, etc. In connexion with steel pen manufacture the industry tables show 444 male and 151 female additional workers, 244 of the males being classified as tool makers.

The sub-order "Arms" included 7,333 persons (of whom 7,129 were males) classed as "Gunsmiths, Gun Manufacturers," and 256 persons (of whom 252 were males) classed as "Sword, Bayonet—Makers, Cutlers." Under the former heading 10,189 persons and under the latter 408 persons were returned in 1901; in 1891 the numbers were 9,398 and 264, respectively. The general decline during the past intercensal period in the principal counties in which the manufacture of guns (small arms) is carried on may be seen from the following figures :—

The remaining occupations comprised in the section "Metals, Machines, Implements" include the workers in tin, copper, lead, zinc, and brass. The numbers at the two censuses under the several headings were as follows :—

With regard to the manufacture of tinplate and of tinplate goods there has been a large increase, amounting to 53·1 per cent. in the number of persons under the former heading, but only a comparatively small increase under the latter heading, viz. :— 7·5 per cent., which was entirely among female workers, the males having decreased by 10·5 per cent. In 1891 the two headings were combined, and it was not therefore possible to state precisely in 1901 what had been the change during the intercensal period in the numbers employed in each branch. In the aggregate there had been a decline of 8·1 per cent., and by separating the numbers in Glamorganshire, Carmarthenshire, and Monmouthshire, to which counties most of the tinplate manufacture was limited, it was inferred that this manufacture had shown a considerable decrease, the aggregate numbers in these (registration) counties having fallen from 22,057 to 15,228, or by 31·0 per cent., while in the remainder of the country, which contained practically all the tinplate goods makers, there had been an increase from 24,183 to 27,263, equal to 12·7 per cent. Thus, it appears that while the manufacture of tinplate has recovered from the serious decline noted in 1901, the manufacture of tinplate goods has not developed to the same extent in the last as in the preceding intercensal period. Some of the apparent falling off may be due to more definite returns (see page lxii.), tin workers in many cases being classified in the occupation tables to the manufacture in which they are engaged.

The comparative figures for tinplate manufacture at the two censuses in the principal centres were as follows :—

	1901.		1911.
	Males.	Females.	Males.	Females.
Glamorganshire	7,989	1,301	12,095	1,823

Monmouthshire	739	60	1,785	167
Gloucestershire	566	8	777	2

In connexion with tinplate manufacture there were employed 2,347 males who are not included under this heading in the occupation tables ; among these additional workers were engine drivers, stokers, firemen—not railway (501), erectors, fitters, turners (367), blacksmiths, strikers (298), and commercial clerks (426).

The local distribution of tinplate goods manufacture may be seen from the following figures :—

The industry tables show 1,472 males and 357 females as additional workers in connexion with tinplate goods manufacture ; these include commercial clerks (300 males and 122 females), lithographers, copper and steel plate printers (156 males and 175 females), messengers, porters, watchmen (235 males), and tool makers (182 males). On the other hand, 3,248 males and 615 females, who were classified by occupation as in tinplate goods manufacture, were working in connexion with other industries, thus making the net total employed in this industry 17,994 males and 9,506 females.

Copper manufacture was carried on chiefly in Glamorganshire (2,094 males), Lancashire (1,689 males), Carmarthenshire (562 males), and Durham (547 males). Zinc manufacture was confined almost exclusively to Glamorganshire (974 males). The numbers under the four headings relating to brass workers cannot, for reasons already stated on page lxvi., be compared separately ; taken together, the largest numbers of males were found in the following counties :—

	1901.	1911.		1901.	1911.
London	5,825	4,178	Lancashire	5,176	4,768
Staffordshire	4,109	3,571	Yorkshire (West Riding)	3,793	4,211
Worcestershire	1,134	1,369	Durham	1,577	1,506
Warwickshire	14,834	11,188	Northumberland	1,203	1,136

Most of the female brass workers were enumerated in Warwickshire and Staffordshire, which together contained 5,113 out of the total of 5,876.

The additional workers employed in connexion with brass foundries are shown by the industry tables to include commercial clerks to the number of 800 males and 410 females, messengers, porters, watchmen (205 males), pattern makers (169 males), tool, etc. makers (181 males), and brass finishers (525 males). Brassfounders, on the other hand, are largely employed in connexion with general engineering and machine making, or with shipbuilding, the total number so returned being 2,456 males, of whom 1,862 were in general engineering and machine making, 326 in shipbuilding, and 268 were not definitely assignable to either industry. Brass finishers also are largely employed in these two industries, the total number so returned being 3,599 males, of whom 3,116 and 373 were definitely assignable to general engineering and to shipbuilding respectively, while a further 208 brass finishers were returned in connexion with motor car making.

Type founders and cutters were employed largely in London, 615 out of the 1,375 males being enumerated in that county. The increase of 6·8 per cent. between 1901 and 1911, as shown in Table XXX., is somewhat understated owing to a change of classification, electrotype and stereotype founders, finishers, moulders, who were included under this heading in 1901, having been transferred to the heading "Stereotypers, Electrotypers" in 1911. Nearly one-half of the total number of die, seal, coin, and medal makers were enumerated in Staffordshire (537 males) and Warwickshire (528 males), and a further 341 were enumerated in London.

Wire Drawers, Makers, etc., included 6,579 males and 485 females in Lancashire, 4,916 males and 281 females in Yorkshire (West Riding), 1,654 males and 834 females in Warwickshire, 1,468 males and 286 females in London, 750 males and 185 females in Worcestershire, and 597 males in Yorkshire (North Riding), these counties containing in all 18,035 out of a total of 22,410 of the workers under this heading. Of the "Lamp, Lantern, Candlestick Makers," 1,701 males and 1,695 females were enumerated in Warwickshire.

The numbers shown at the two censuses under the heading "White Metal, Plated—Ware Manufacturers; Pewterers" are not strictly comparable, owing to the fact that the terms Silversmith, Silver—Buffer, Burnisher, Finisher, etc. are used in the Sheffield district to describe some of the workers in this trade, and the industry given in the industry column of the schedule has led to the more accurate classification of these workers under the present heading, instead of under the heading "Goldsmiths, Silversmiths, Jewellers" in Order XI.; those silversmiths, etc. for whom no statement was made as to the industry with which they were connected were in Sheffield all classed under the heading relating to plated, etc. ware. There has consequently been a large reduction in the numbers shown as "Goldsmiths, Silversmiths, Jewellers" and a large increase in those shown as "White Metal, etc. Manufacturers," the figures for Sheffield County Borough being :—

	Males.	Females.	Males.	Females.
Goldsmiths, Silversmiths, Jewellers	1,749	123	68	35
White Metal, Plated—Ware Manufacture	3,358	3,576	5,546	4,201

The only other important centre of this trade is Birmingham, in which 3,465 males and 2,250 females so employed were enumerated within the city as extended in November, 1911. In London there were 718 males and 63 females classified under this heading.

Lock and Key Making is localised in Staffordshire (mainly in Willenhall Urban District), in which county more than five-sixths of the workers in this industry were enumerated, the numbers being 4,630 males and 1,002 females in 1911, against 4,584 males and 519 females in 1901. Gas Fittings Makers were found principally in Warwickshire (1,925 males and 816 females), in Staffordshire (1,534 males and 204 females), in London (524 males and 1,039 females), and in Yorkshire, West Riding (146 males and 731 females), the numbers in each case showing considerable increase over those returned in 1901. Some part of the increase, especially among males, may be due to transference from other less definite headings on account of improvement in the returns, no change in classification having been made since 1901. Among females the increase may be attributed largely to the growth of incandescent gas mantle making in this country.

(b) "Electrical Apparatus."—Persons included in this sub-order were classified as follows in 1911 :—

	Persons.	Males.	Females.
Electrical Cable Manufacture	5,813	4,858	955
Electric Lamp Makers	5,627	1,425	4,202
Other Electrical Apparatus Makers; Electrical Fitters	54,611	50,558	4,053
Electricians (undefined)	27,970	27,905	65
Total ...	94,021	84,746	9,275

In 1901 the corresponding totals, which were then shown under one heading ("electrical apparatus makers"), and were included in Order XI., were 49,518 persons (47,028 males and 2,490 females); the increase in the recorded numbers during the intercensal period was thus 89·9 per cent., the rate of increase being much higher for females than for males. Comparison with censuses before 1901 can be made only by adding to this sub-order persons classified to the heading "electricity supply" in Order XXI. These numbered 14,870 in 1911, giving a total of 108,891 persons, as compared with 52,433 in 1901; of these totals 99,600 and 49,916, respectively, were males. In 1891 only 12,135 males were so returned; in 1881 there had been only 2,496, and in 1871 only 408.

Only 2,915 persons were returned in 1901 as engaged in the supply of electricity, but the report on that census, commenting on this figure stated "there is reason to believe that this is less than the true number, many drivers of generating engines having described themselves as electrical engineers, and having been accordingly classified as electrical apparatus makers." There is still considerable looseness of description—nearly one-third of the males being classed under the heading "electricians undefined," which includes electrical engineers undefined—but the particulars now furnished as to industry with which connected have contributed to a more complete separation of persons engaged in the generation and supply of electricity from those engaged in making and fitting electrical apparatus.

The manufacture of electrical cables is carried on principally in London, Kent, and Essex, where 3,093 of the workers were enumerated, and in Lancashire and Cheshire, where there were 2,364. Electric lamp manufacture employed 536 males and 1,518 females in Middlesex, and 368 males and 1,368 females in London. The sub-order, as a whole, is most strongly represented in the following counties :—

In connexion with electrical cable manufacture there were 2,110 male and 103 female additional workers, the males including 680 commercial clerks, 242 erectors, fitters, turners, and their labourers, 154 drivers, stokers, firemen of stationary engines, and 153 wire drawers, workers, etc. Electric lamp manufacture gave employment to 510 male and 264 female additional workers, of whom 371 (195 males and 176 females) were commercial clerks.

With regard to other or undefined electrical apparatus making, the industry tables show that while these manufactures gave employment to 9,248 male and 1,600 female additional workers, the number of electrical apparatus makers, electrical fitters, and electricians (undefined), returned as working in connexion with other industries or services, was 28,201, of whom all but 114 were males. The additional workers in connexion with electrical apparatus making—other than electrical cable, electric lamp making—included commercial clerks (4,240 males and 1,392 females), messengers, porters, watchmen (859 males), tool makers (571 males), erectors, fitters, etc. (517 males), metal machinists (514 males), ironfounders (462 males), carpenters, joiners and their labourers (315 males), engine drivers, stokers, firemen —not railway (319 males), and blacksmiths, strikers (194 males). The electrical apparatus makers, electricians, etc. working in connexion with other industries or services included 7,319 males in government service, 4,238 males in telegraph, telephone service (not government), 3,457 on railways, 2,130 in coal mines, 2,645 in Local Authorities' service (including 888 in tramway service, 1,017 in iron and steel manufacture, 1,094 in iron foundries, boiler making works, and in engineering works, and 699 in shipbuilding works.

(c) Ships and Boats.—The number of males engaged in building Ships and Boats increased from 86,524 in 1901 to 104,508 in 1911, or by 20·8 per cent. ; in the preceding intercensal period the rate of increase was 24·4 per cent. The numbers returned under the several occupational headings in this sub-order cannot be compared in detail for the two censuses, but speaking generally it appears that the two headings relating specifically to workers in iron showed an aggregate increase of about 53 per cent., while the numbers under the two headings relating specifically to workers in wood increased by less than 6 per cent. Ship painters, who were not previously distinguished in the tables, were returned in 1911 to the number of 5,002. The numbers include persons engaged in building small pleasure craft, as well as those engaged in the maintenance and repair of vessels of all kinds. The increase recorded does not therefore correspond with the actual increase in shipbuilding. The total net tonnage of ships (exclusive of vessels of the Royal Navy) launched at ports in England and Wales during 1911 was upwards of 646,000, against 625,000 in 1901 ; the tonnage of wooden vessels, however, was less than 8,000 in 1911, against 13,000 in 1901. Including vessels of the Royal Navy, the total net tonnage of ships launched at English and Welsh ports rose from 773,000 in 1901 to 797,000 in 1911, or by 3·1 per cent. The relative changes in the local distribution of the numbers engaged in shipbuilding are shown in the following table :—

In addition to the 104,508 males and 242 females classified in this sub-order in the occupation tables, there were 19,567 males and 233 females following various other occupations, but returned as employed in connexion with the shipbuilding industry ; while, on the other hand, there were 2,811 males engaged in shipbuilding occupations, but employed in connexion with other industries. The additional workers in the shipbuilding industry included blacksmiths, strikers (5,514 males), boiler makers (2,391 males), plumbers (1,652 males), erectors, fitters, turners, and their labourers (1,001 males), engine–drivers, stokers, firemen—not railway (960 males), electrical apparatus makers, fitters, electricians (699 males), ironfounders (493 males), metal machinists (425 males), coppersmiths (387 males), brass finishers (373 males), brass founders (326 males), and cabinet makers, French polishers, upholsterers (332 males) ; there were also commercial clerks (1,895 males and 148 females), and messengers, porters, watchmen (619 males). The returns relating to the shipbuilding industry, as shown by the above figures, are, however, somewhat incomplete, owing to the fact that where shipbuilding and general engineering were carried on by the same firm it was not possible in all cases to distinguish the employees in the respective departments. There were in all 5,186 males and 80 females following various occupations who were employed in connexion with shipbuilding or engineering, but could not be definitely assigned to either (see page 706).

As far as possible, workers in government shipbuilding works have been distinguished, and amounted to 16,262 males and 42 females, while there were a further 954 males who were employed either in government shipbuilding or in government engineering.

In the construction of Vehicles 182,160 persons were returned as engaged in 1911, against 118,478 in 1901. The headings under which they are classified at the two censuses and the rates of increase under each heading are shown as follows :—

The decline among coach makers and wheelwrights is in marked contrast to the huge increase of workers in the manufacture of cycles and motor cars. Railway —coach, wagon makers increased in all the principal centres, but some part of the recorded increase is probably due to improved returns owing to column 11 of the schedule, the largest numbers at the two censuses in the several counties being as follows :—

Administrative Counties (with associated County Boroughs).	Males.		Administrative Counties (with associated County Boroughs).	Males.

The industry tables show that of the 37,794 males engaged in railway—coach, wagon making, 22,461 were returned as in the service of railway companies. Additional workers employed by the railway companies in connexion with the construction of these vehicles included blacksmiths, strikers (1,314 males), erectors, fitters, etc., including labourers (328 males), gasfitters (275 males), French polishers (226 males and 241 females), and upholsterers (181 females). Altogether 26,291 males and 510 females were returned as employed in railway companies' coach and wagon works. Owing to the fact that in certain cases railway coaches and tram cars are made in the same works, it is not possible to distinguish with certainty those employees in these two industries who are not classified to these headings in the occupation tables. In the industry tables, therefore, in addition to the 15,333 males engaged in making railway coaches and wagons (not in the direct employ of railway companies), and the 2,703 in tram car making, there are shown 3,941 male and 105 female workers following other occupations in connexion with these two industries taken together ; these additional workers included blacksmiths, strikers (1,633 males), ironfounders (398 males), and commercial clerks (616 males). Of the 15,333 males engaged in railway coach, wagon making, 1,275 were employed in connexion with coal mines, and of the 2,703 tram car makers, 1,371 were in the service of Local Authorities.

The number of cycle makers cannot be stated separately from the motor car makers in 1901, though, doubtless at that date, the great majority of the workers shown under the combined heading were engaged in cycle manufacture. The figures for 1911, however, show that there must have been a large increase in cycle making, for the numbers returned exceed the total in cycle and motor manufacture in 1901, though this was not the case in all the counties where these manufactures are carried on. The largest numbers under these headings were as follows :—

The numbers of females were inconsiderable except in Staffordshire, where they rose from 130 to 637, in Worcestershire, where they rose from 224 to 914, and in Warwickshire, where they rose from 2,228 to 4,631, and were nearly all engaged in cycle manufacture.

The net total of persons returned as employed in the cycle making industry was 32,167 males and 7,310 females, inclusive of the 29,063 males and 6,328 females classified in the occupation tables as " cycle makers." The workers not so classified comprised commercial clerks (1,195 males and 851 females), tool makers (838 males), and messengers, porters, watchmen (478 males). In addition to the 52,539 males and 612 females included under the headings " motor car chassis makers," " motor car body makers," there were 9,142 males and 1,016 females following other occupations but returned as working in connexion with the motor car industry ; these comprised commercial clerks (2,865 males and 870 females), messengers, porters, watchmen (573 males), motor car drivers (369 males), metal machinists (1,305 males), tool makers (836 males), and blacksmiths, strikers (740 males). There were, on the other hand, 3,491 motor car workers or mechanics returned in connexion with other industries ; of these 705 were employed by motor cab companies and 1,363 by motor garage proprietors (other than motor cab companies).

The decrease among coach makers appears to have been general throughout the country, the principal exception being Staffordshire, where the number rose from 1,071 to 1,666.

The rapid development of motor car manufacture and the corresponding decline among coach makers and wheelwrights has a marked effect on the age-distribution of the workers ; in the one case the number of new entrants swells the proportions at the youngest ages, while in the other case the preponderance of older workers represents the survivors of the larger numbers entering the occupation in former years. The following figures show how widely the age-distribution varies in these cases :—

XI. Precious Metals, Jewels, Watches, Instruments, and Games Apparatus.— The number of persons comprised in this Order was 123,594 (99,931 males and 23,663 females), which, compared with the 99,920 persons (83,703 males and 16,217 females) returned under the corresponding heading in 1901 (after excluding from Order XI. of that census electrical apparatus makers and fitters who are now classed in Order X.), showed an increase during the intercensal period of 23·7 per cent. (19·4 per cent. for males and 45·9 per cent. for females). The totals are affected to some extent for purposes of comparison by the inclusion of some dental assistants who, on account of less definite returns, were included in Order III. in 1901 (see page xxi.), and by the exclusion of a number of persons describing themselves as silversmiths, etc. (mostly in Sheffield) who are now classed in Order X. (see page lxxii).

The workers and dealers in Precious Metals, Jewellery, and Watches showed an increase of 1·7 per cent. on the numbers returned in 1901 ; the males decreased by 2·9 per cent., but the females increased by 26·3 per cent. They were classified under the followings headings :—

	1901.			1911.
	Persons.	Males.	Females.	Persons.	Males.	Females.
Goldsmiths, Silversmiths, Jewellers	28,900	23,730	5,170	26,977	19,665	7,312

The separation of " dealers " from " makers " was held in 1901 to have been unsatisfactory, it being stated in the report on that census that " many persons, notwithstanding the instructions on the schedules, returned themselves as 'Watch-makers and Jewellers,' although engaged almost exclusively in dealing." Doubtless, some part of the large increase in the numbers recorded under the heading for " dealers " is due to improvement of the returns in this respect. For this reason, coupled with the probability of some overlapping among the other three headings, it is inadvisable to attempt comparisons in detail of the numbers under each separate heading. Some comparisons may, however, be made as regards the principal centres of the industries. The largest numbers of goldsmiths, silversmiths, jewellers, lapidaries, etc. were returned in London (6,149 persons), Middlesex (1,275), Staffordshire (4,049) Warwickshire (12,735), and Worcestershire (951). In London and Middlesex the figures may be affected by the large numbers of dealers, but in the other three counties (which include the Birmingham district) the dealers were relatively few, and the figures for the two censuses may, therefore, be compared ; they were as follows :—

	1901.			1911.
	Persons.	Males.	Females.	Persons.	Males.	Females.
Staffordshire	2,509	1,945	564	4,049	2,854	1,195
Warwickshire	12,016	7,968	4,048	12,735	7,961	4,774
Worcestershire	392	366	26	951	806	145

In the case of watch and clock makers the reduction is no doubt largely, if not entirely, due to the improved returns of " dealers." The Board of Trade's Statistical Abstract, however, shows that the number of watches and clocks imported into the United Kingdom had, on the whole, shown a considerable increase during the inter-censal period, although their total value had actually decreased, and there was at the same time a very marked decrease in the value of watches and clocks exported.

The industry tables show that in the employ of goldsmiths, silversmiths, jewellers, lapidaries, etc., there were 2,463 male and 1,985 female workers classified to other headings in the occupation tables ; these included commercial clerks (804 males and 1,737 females), messengers, porters, etc. (1,004 males), and tool makers (250 males). Dealers in precious metals, jewels, watches, and clocks employed 1,859 commercial clerks (939 males and 920 females), 1,523 commercial travellers, and 1,190 messengers, porters, etc.

The workers and dealers in Scientific Instruments, Musical Instruments and Apparatus for Sports and Games showed marked increases under all the headings. The numbers so classified at the two censuses were as follows :—

	1901.			1911.
	Persons.	Males.	Females.	Persons.	Males.	Females.
Scientific Instrument Makers ; Opticans	5,954	5,420	534	8,186	7,398	788

Scientific Instrument Makers and Opticians, with whom were classed Photographic Apparatus Makers in 1901, increased by 55·4 per cent. (53·0 per cent. for males and 80·1 per cent. for females). More than half of these were enumerated in London or the adjoining counties of Middlesex and Essex, where 4,807 males and 531 females were returned under these headings in 1911, against 3,021 males and 270 females in 1901, the former numbers including 659 males and 88 females returned as photographic apparatus makers. Makers of Weighing and Measuring Apparatus were shown to be twice as numerous in 1911 as in 1901, but the numbers under this heading are probably affected considerably by the introduction of column 11 of the schedule. The principal counties in which these persons were returned were as follows :—

	1901.		1911.
	Males.	Females.	Males.	Females.
London	1,026	10	1,570	42
Middlesex	165	.	524	5
Essex	135	.	309	8
Staffordshire	307	144	1,145	283
Warwickshire	831	227	1,161	360
Lancashire	646	11	1,429	29
Yorkshire, West Riding	330	58	570	134

The number of Surgical and Dental Instrument Makers was probably understated in 1901 owing to some dental assistants having been classed in Order III. (see page xxi). It appears probable, however, that even after making full allowance for such transfer, there has been considerable increase under this heading. In London, together with Middlesex and Essex, the numbers rose from 2,070 to 3,686, in Lancashire from 381 to 897, and in Yorkshire, West Riding, from 431 to 641. Makers of Pianos and Organs also, who were not distinguished from other musical instrument makers at previous censuses, were found mainly in London and the neighbouring counties of Essex and Middlesex, in Lancashire, and in Yorkshire, West Riding. The numbers at the two censuses for all musical instrument makers in these counties were as follows :—

	1901.	1911.
	Total.	Total.	Piano and Organ Makers.	Other Musical Instrument. Makers.
London	7,369	6,737	5,775	962
Middlesex	986	2,123	1,630	493
Essex	487	941	881	60
Lancashire	867	1,031	903	128
Yorkshire, West Riding	856	983	935	48

In the manufacture of fishing tackle, toys, or apparatus for games 11,152 persons were employed in 1911, against 6,437 in 1901. Apart from London, where the numbers at the two censuses were 3,419 (2,099 males and 1,320 females) and 2,064 (1,371 males and 693 females), respectively, the largest numbers classed under this heading were in Worcestershire, where there were 2,201 (853 males and 1,348 females) in 1911, against 1,767 (733 males and 1,034 females) in 1901—the majority of these being enumerated in Redditch.

The " additional workers " employed by the makers of scientific instruments, musical instruments, and apparatus for sports and games included 1,045 French polishers employed by piano, organ—makers, and 269 males engaged in general engineering or machine making for weighing and measuring apparatus makers ; with these exceptions most of the additional workers were clerks, or messengers, porters, etc. The employees of the dealers in these articles included, in addition to those classified under this heading, 1,245 commercial travellers, 1,008 commercial clerks (625 males and 383 females), and 474 messengers, porters, etc. The surgical and dental apparatus makers included 340 males who were returned as employed by dentists ; and the weighing and measuring apparatus makers included 380 (mostly gas meter makers and repairers) in gas supply service—157 of them being in the employ of Local Authorities.

XII. Building, and Works of Construction.—The Twelfth Order is practically confined to males, of whom there were 946,127 in 1911, against 1,042,864 in 1901, a decrease of 9·3 per cent. Probably this percentage represents very fairly the actual decline in the Building Trades, though the totals themselves have been considerably affected by differences in the method of making the returns at the two censuses. The addition of column 11 to the schedule has led to more definite information being obtained, and this has resulted, on the one hand, in the inclusion in this Order of many labourers who—with the less definite information formerly obtained—would have appeared as undefined or general labourers in Order XXII. ; the additions from this cause are most noticeable under the heading " Builders' Labourers," which is, however, also affected by transference of builders' excavators from the heading " Navvies, etc." On the other hand, improvement in the data has led to the exclusion of many " Stone Quarriers, Stone Cutters, Dressers " (Order IX.), who would otherwise have appeared as " Masons " ; and also to the exclusion of many " House and Shop Fittings Makers " and " Sawyers, Wood Cutting Machinists " (Order XIII.), who would otherwise have been classed as " Carpenters, Joiners." Further, a change of classification, viz., the transfer of " Pitwrights " from this order to Order IX. (see page lix.) has also diminished the number under the heading " Carpenters, Joiners."

The females in this Order numbered only 580, and they were for the most part widows, returned as " employers," who were presumably carrying on the business of their deceased husbands. Women returned as assisting the head of the family in the occupations of this Order were classified to the heading " Other Workers in Sundry Industries " (Order XXII.). In the following paragraphs we shall refer only to the males under the different headings.

House Building, etc.—The males included in this sub-order totalled 872,963. In 1901 the number was 945,184, so that, disregarding the changes in the method of return referred to above, there was a decrease of 7·6 per cent., while between 1891 and 1901 there was an increase of 36·2 per cent., following an increase of only 2·0 per cent. between 1881 and 1891, though the gradual reduction of the indefinite class of labourers at successive censuses makes it probable that the actual rates of increase between 1881 and 1901 were rather less than the figures indicate. The decline since 1901 appears to be confirmed by the decline in the numbers of brickmakers and of stone and slate quarriers, cutters, and dressers, and also by the great falling-off in the numbers of members of the trades unions connected with the building trades. A further index to the state of the building trades is furnished by the number of dwelling houses in course of erection at the date of the census; in 1911 the number was only 38,178, against 61,909 in 1901, and the ratio of these to the number of inhabited houses was only 5·3 to 1,000, against 9·9 per 1,000; and although comparisons with previous censuses must be made with caution (for the reasons stated on page x., Volume VI.) it is significant that of the six counties in which an increase in the number of houses being built was recorded, the three, viz., Monmouth, Glamorgan, and Carmarthen, in which the rate of increase was greatest also showed the greatest proportional increase in the number of men engaged in the building trades. Middlesex, on the other hand, furnishes an example of a county in which there was a decrease in the number of houses being built associated with an increased number of builders—many of whom were, however, probably engaged in building operations in London.

The most striking feature in the census figures is the decline in the numbers under nearly all the headings in this sub-order at ages under 25; in the age-period 10–15 the decrease was 53·6 per cent.; in the period 15–20, 51·8 per cent; and in the period 20–25, 37·8 per cent. The figures are significant of the general decline in these occupations. Comparison of the age-distribution in this sub-order with that for all occupied males between 15 and 65 shows that only 18·2 per cent. are under 25 years of age, against an average of 27·9 per cent. for all occupations. The variations between the two censuses are so remarkable that we give the numbers at ages for all the headings of the sub-order :—

We have already referred to changes which have tended to exaggerate the differences in the numbers classified at the two censuses under the headings "Builders' Labourers" and "Carpenters, Joiners" (see page lxxix.). Bricklayers declined by 11·4 per cent. at all ages—the decline at ages under 25 being equal to 66·8 per cent., while above that age they increased by 13·3 per cent. Bricklayers' Labourers fell from 97,779 to 69,809, although the improvement in the returns would have a tendency to increase their number; doubtless the actual decline is largely due to changes in the methods of working, resulting in a decreased demand for the man with the hod. Masons and their Labourers, Plasterers and their Labourers, Slaters and Tilers, and Locksmiths and Bellhangers also show a decline. It is not, however, clear why the number of "Paperhangers, Whitewashers" should have fallen from 6,437 to 5,960, while the number of "Painters, Decorators, and Glaziers" rose from 160,201 to 184,563, but it is probable that the two occupations are not sufficiently distinct to admit of much reliance being placed upon the respective totals. The only other headings showing increase are "Plumbers," in which case the numbers in 1911 are reduced by a change in classification; and "Gasfitters," in which case the increase is probably understated owing to the inclusion at the census of 1901 of some men who, as a result of fuller information, have now been classed to "Gas Works Service" (Order XXI.).

The 872,963 males classified to the occupational headings of the sub-order "House Building, etc." included 87,274 who were returned as following these occupations in connexion with some other industry or service, while there were, on the other hand, 29,299 males classified to various other occupational headings but returned as being employed in connexion with building trades. These 29,299 additional male workers included 11,544 carmen, motor van drivers, etc.; 9,002 commercial clerks; 2,218 messengers, porters, watchmen; 1,787 sawyers, wood cutting machinists; 1,002 engine drivers, stokers, firemen (not railway), and 737 blacksmiths, strikers. There were, also, 1,351 female commercial clerks employed in this industry.

Men working at building trades in connexion with other industries or services included 32,419 carpenters, joiners, and their labourers, 17,705 bricklayers and their labourers, 9,803 gasfitters, 9,617 painters and decorators, 8,466 plumbers, and 5,986 masons and their labourers. Of the carpenters, 5,704 were returned as employed in connexion with coal mining, 4,925 in railway companies' service, 3,906 in iron founding, boiler making, and engineering and machine making works, 1,397 in connexion with textile manufactures, bleaching, etc., 1,021 in breweries, 876 in connexion with iron and steel manufacture, 809 in chemical and alkali manufacture, 791 in harbour, dock, etc. service, and 748 in theatre service. The bricklayers and their labourers included 3,016 in connexion with iron and steel manufacture, 2996, in connexion with coal mining, 2,544 in railway companies' service, 1,830 in the various services of Local Authorities, and 788 in iron founding, boiler making and general engineering and machine making works. The painters and decorators were employed chiefly in railway companies' service (3,302) and by Local Authorities (1,701). Of the plumbers, 1,652 were returned as employed in connexion with shipbuilding (including 310 in the service of the National Government), 1,176 in railway companies' service, 1,218 in the various services of Local Authorities, and 507 by ironmongers. Gasfitters to the number of 7,569 were returned as connected with gas works service and 1,200 as in railway companies' service. The masons and their labourers included 1,534 working in connexion with coal mining, 1,668 in the various services of Local Authorities, and 876 in railway companies' service.

Other Works of Construction and Roads.—This sub-order includes "Navvies, Railway, etc. Contractors' Labourers," who decreased from 41,645 to 23,125; "Paviours, Road Labourers," who decreased from 50,370 to 44,526; "Road, Railway, Canal, Harbour, etc. Contractors," who decreased from 2,747 to 2,317 and "Well, Mine—Sinkers, Borers," who increased from 2,918 to 3,196. The decrease in the number of navvies may be due in part to the transfer, to the first sub-order, of excavators who were defined in column 11 of the schedule as working in connexion with building, and were accordingly classified as "Builders' Labourers"; and the decrease in the number of "Paviours, Road Labourers," to the fact that in 1901 labourers in the employ of a sanitary authority were classified as "Paviours, Road Labourers" unless otherwise described, but in 1911 such persons were classed as "General Labourers." An increase in the number of navvies in Derbyshire and the North Riding of Yorkshire was associated with the construction of waterworks in those counties, and in Lincolnshire and Glamorganshire with the construction of docks, and in the latter case with waterworks and railway construction also. Large decreases in the counties of Radnor, Salop, Worcester, and Warwick were due to the completion, during the intercensal period, of the Birmingham waterworks; other counties in which noteworthy decreases were recorded were Sussex, Suffolk, Norfolk, Wilts, Dorset, Devon, Gloucester, Hereford, Cheshire, Lancashire, Yorkshire West Riding, and Durham. In London and the adjoining counties a reduction in the number of navvies is probably accounted for to some extent by the fact that more tramway construction was in progress at the date of the census of 1901 than in 1911.

In connexion with the general decrease in the numbers it may be noted that during 1911 only 31 miles of tramways were opened in England and Wales, against 107 miles in 1901.

In addition to the labourers employed by road, railway, canal, harbour, etc. contractors, the industry tables show 5,861 other males returned as employed in connexion with various works of construction ; 1,308 of these additional workers were engine drivers, stokers, firemen (not railway) ; 757 were carmen, motor van, etc. drivers, and 744 were commercial clerks. On the other hand, the 44,526 paviours, road labourers classified to this sub-order in the occupation tables included 31,147 who were in the service of Local Authorities ; the 23,125 navvies included 1,768 employed by Local Authorities, 761 being employed in waterworks service and 246 in harbour, dock, etc. service ; and the 3,196 " Well, Mine—Sinkers, Borers " included 1,089 who were returned as employed in connexion with coal mines.

XIII. Wood, Furniture, Fittings, and Decorations.—In the Wood Working and Furnishing Trades comprising the Thirteenth Order there were enumerated 283,986 persons, or 26,394 more than in 1901, the three headings relating to " Dealers " showing an increase of 12,382 on 31,062 persons in 1901, and the fourteen headings for " Makers " an increase of only 14,012 on 226,530. Some part of the increase in the " Dealers " was due to their more complete separation from the " Makers " in 1911 than in 1901, but any transfer from the " Makers " through this cause would probably be more than compensated for by additions to the headings " House and Shop Fittings Makers " and " Sawyers ; Wood Cutting Machinists," due to extra information obtained through column 11 of the schedule (see page lxxix.), so that there is some doubt whether the " Makers " have increased at even so high a rate as the figures denote, viz., 6·2 per cent.

Furniture, Fittings, and Decorations.—In the first sub-order the workers and dealers in furniture, fittings, and decorations increased only from 158,620 to 173,257, or by 9·2 per cent., as against 26·8 per cent. between 1891 and 1901. Excluding the headings for " Dealers " and that for " House and Shop Fittings Makers," to which reference has been made above, and which is now perhaps less allied to furnishing than to building, the numbers declined from 128,842 to 125,805, or by 2·4 per cent. A comparison of the numbers engaged in the various occupations comprising the sub-order is made in the following table :—

Among males, increases were recorded under only three of the headings other than those for dealers ; the largest proportional increase (95·9 per cent.) was under the heading " House and Shop Fittings Makers," which is not strictly comparable at the two censuses, the only other considerable increase being the 22·0 per cent. for the comparatively small class of " Undertakers." Among females all the headings in the table show an increase, but it is probable that some of it is due to the more complete returns of occupations of wives and other female relatives, and some of the numbers are so small that a slight increase in the actual number gives a high percentage ; in the two principal branches employing most female labour, viz. French polishing and upholstering, the increases have been only 6·5 and 0·3 per cent. respectively.

The numbers returned under the three headings, Cabinet Makers, French Polishers and Upholsterers, which may be taken to include the bulk of furniture makers, showed a decline of 905 in the aggregate ; if the furniture dealers are added, so as to discount the overlapping of makers and dealers, the net increase in the total was 7,511, or 6·3 per cent., against an increase of 30·4 per cent. between 1891 and 1901. In London there has been a considerable decline in the number of cabinet makers, French polishers, and upholsterers, which, however, has been more than counterbalanced by increases in the adjoining counties of Middlesex and Essex.

The industrial tabulation shows that there were 6,109 male and 752 female additional workers employed in connexion with cabinet making, French polishing and upholstering ; these additional workers included sawyers, wood cutting machinists (2,035 males), wood carvers, etc. (456 males), messengers, porters, watchmen (1,265 males), carmen (484 males), and commercial clerks (1,053 males and 344 females). On the other hand, 1,045 French polishers (males) were returned as working for piano and organ makers, 525 (255 males and 270 females) for railway coach, wagon makers and tram car makers, and 227 (males) for house and shop fittings makers. Furniture dealers employed 9,598 male and 1,360 female additional workers, these numbers including 3,620 messengers, porters, watchmen ; 3,161 commercial clerks (of whom 1,131 were females) ; 1,742 carmen, motor van drivers, and 1,659 commercial travellers. House and shop fittings makers employed 1,823 male and 305 female additional workers in various occupations ; and 1,551 males (including 1,168 coachmen, horsekeepers, etc.) and 103 females were returned as additional workers in connexion with undertakers' businesses.

Wood Carvers and Carvers and Gilders, who had increased by 20·6 per cent. in 1891–1901, declined by 15·4 per cent. between 1901 and 1911, but it is possible that there may be some interchange between this heading and Cabinet Making. Willow, Cane, Rush—Workers, Basket Makers decreased by 5·7 per cent., following a decrease of 6·6 per cent. in 1891–1901. This is an industry in which blind persons are largely employed, their numbers having been 1,120 and 1,099, or 9·7 per cent. and 10·1 per cent. of the totals respectively in 1901 and 1911.

Wood and Bark.—The workers and dealers in Wood and Bark, as returned in the second sub-order, numbered 110,729, against 98,972 in 1901. This represents an increase of 11·9 per cent., but to some unknown extent the increase is due to change in the method of filling up the schedule already referred to under Order XII. (page lxxix.). This will partly account also for so great an increase as 24·4 per cent. (from 32,325 to 40,225) in the heading for " Sawyers, Wood Cutting Machinists," and the decrease of 15·1 per cent. (from 10,208 to 8,665) in the heading for " Wood Turners," the wood turners described in column 11 as engaged in any manufacturing industry being usually classed to that industry instead of to the special heading for the occupation ; thus, for example, wood turners engaged in making handles of tools or parts of musical instruments are classed to tool making or musical instrument making respectively. The number of workers returned as employed in saw mills or steam joinery works, in addition to the 40,225 classified as " sawyers, wood cutting machinists," amounted to 3,320, and the males included 978 engine drivers, stokers, firemen (not railway) ; 552 carmen, motor van drivers ; 395 commercial clerks ; 298 messengers, porters, watchmen ; 189 engaged in general engineering and machine making, and 183 saw makers. The number of " sawyers, wood cutting machinists " returned as employed in connexion with other industries amounted to 12,440, and included 2,439 employed by timber, etc. dealers, 2,035 by cabinet makers, French polishers or upholsterers, 1,787 by builders, 1,102 in connexion with coal mining, 963 in iron founding, boiler making, and general engineering and machine making works, 817 in wooden box, packing case making, and 744 in railway companies' service.

Wooden Box and Packing Case Makers numbered 13,341, as compared with 11,223 in 1901, an increase of 18·9 per cent., which is confined to the males, for while they increased by 23·4 per cent., from 9,521 to 11,747, the much smaller number of females apparently declined by 6·3 per cent. Many of these workers are employed directly by the firms for whose goods the boxes and cases are required; such workers, who numbered, according to the returns, 3,554 males and 555 females, are naturally distributed over a large number of industries. Coopers and hoop makers and benders, who had declined by 8·3 per cent. between 1891 and 1901, further declined from 15,779 to 14,044, or by 11·0 per cent. No fewer than 7,682 of the latter number were returned as employed in connexion with various industries, including brewing (3,145 males), plaster, cement manufacture (824 males), chemical and alkali manufacture (808 males), oil milling, etc. (405 males), and dye, paint, ink, etc. manufacture (348 males).

The numbers of Lath, Wooden Fence, and Hurdle Makers have fallen off at every recent census. At the present census there were only 1,815, compared with 2,232 in 1901. Cork and Bark Cutters and Workers, who had declined 1·6 per cent. between 1891 and 1901, further declined 10·3 per cent. At each census since 1881 the males have fallen off and the females increased in number. In 1881 there were only 11 females to 100 males, in 1891 the proportion was 22 per cent., in 1901 it was 32 per cent., and at the present census, 51 per cent.

The miscellaneous heading "Other Workers in Wood," which shows an increase from 16,453 to 20,363 brings the total of "workers" in Wood and Bark to 100,326, which is 10,007 or 11·1 per cent. more than the total of the same group of headings in 1901. The dealers in Wood and Bark numbered 10,403, or 20·1 per cent. more than the 8,663 so classified at the last census. There were, however, altogether upwards of 28,000 persons, according to the industry returns, engaged in various occupations in connexion with timber dealing businesses; the 17,993 additional workers included commercial clerks (4,305 males and 359 females), commercial travellers (1,474 males), sawyers, wood cutting machinists (2,439 males), "other workers in wood" (3,741 males), carpenters and joiners and their labourers (250 males), engine drivers, stokers, firemen, not railway (309 males), carmen, motor van drivers (2,970 males), messengers, porters, watchmen (448 males), dock labourers (392 males), and woodmen (289 males).

XIV. Brick, Cement, Pottery, and Glass.—In the Fourteenth Order there was a falling-off between 1901 and 1911 in the total number of persons returned as engaged in the manufacture or sale of Bricks, Cement, Pottery, and Glass from 175,513 to 173,838, or by 1·0 per cent.; the males decreased from 142,365 to 134,714, or by 5·4 per cent., but the females increased from 33,148 to 39,124, or by 18·0 per cent.

Brick, Plain Tile, Terra-Cotta—Makers.—The decline of 11,972 under this heading is responsible for the net decrease in the total of the Order, the number having fallen from 63,927 to 51,955, or by 18·7 per cent. This is associated with a large reduction in the numbers employed in Building and Works of Construction (see Order XII.). In 1901, when there was a substantial increase over 1891 in the numbers classified as brick, etc. makers, there was concurrently a large increase in the numbers in the building trades.

Brick making is mainly a male occupation, the number of females employed being 2,768, a reduction of 9·9 per cent. on the number returned in 1901. Most of the female brickmakers were enumerated in the counties of Staffordshire and Worcestershire, where they numbered 1,336 and 643 respectively.

From the following table, which gives the counties in which the industry is mainly carried on, it will be seen that the decline is general, being most marked, however, in Essex and Kent:—

BRICK, PLAIN TILE, TERRA-COTTA—MAKERS.

Among the counties specified above, Glamorganshire was the only one in which an increase was recorded, and in the remainder of the country the largest increases were in Monmouthshire (57·4 per cent.) and Carmarthenshire (59·8 per cent.). In each of these three counties there was a rise in the numbers engaged in the building trades (see page lxxx.).

In connexion with the manufacture of bricks, tiles, etc., there were employed, in addition to the 51,955 persons classified under this heading in the occupation tables, 9,395 persons following other occupations; these additional workers included, among males, 1,998 clay, etc. pit workers, 1,629 engine drivers, stokers, firemen (not railway), 2,135 carmen, 245 bargemen, 228 messengers, porters, watchmen, 1,098 commercial clerks, 290 blacksmiths, and, including their labourers, 246 erectors, fitters, turners, 305 carpenters, joiners, and 335 bricklayers.

Earthenware, China, Porcelain—Manufacture.—The number of persons engaged in the manufacture of Earthenware, China, and Porcelain was 69,863, an increase of 7,388, or 11·8 per cent., over the figures of 1901. Comparison of the numbers of males and females separately shows that the males have increased from 37,998 to 40,424, or by 6·4 per cent., and the females from 24,477 to 29,439, or by 20·3 per cent.

In contrast to Brickmaking, which is distributed generally throughout the country, the Earthenware industry is practically localised in Staffordshire, which contains nearly 75 per cent. of the total workers. The appended table gives the counties and rates of increase or decrease where the industry is carried on to any extent :—

The proportion of female labour in earthenware manufacture has, since 1861, shown a continuous, though irregular, increase. It was stated in the Report on the Census of 1891 that "from evidence given before the Royal Commission on Labour it appears that the potters complain that the extensive introduction of labour-saving appliances in the last ten years has increased female labour at the expense of male labour. The successive census returns hardly corroborate this statement, so far, at any rate, as concerns the aggregate of all the processes in the manufacture; for while in 1881 there were 62 women employed to 100 men, the proportion in 1891 had only changed to 63 to 100. There had, it is true, been a greater change in earlier decennia, for the proportion in 1861 was 46, and in 1871 was 55 to 100." In 1901 the proportion had only risen to 64, but at the last census it had reached 73 per cent.

It is also worthy of note that 7,601, or 25·8 per cent., of the females were married women, and it would appear that the number of married females engaged in the manufacture of earthenware, etc., tends to increase. This is shown by the following table, which gives the number of married and widowed females separately for 1911 and the married and widowed together for 1901 (at which census they were not separately tabulated), and it will be noticed that most of the increase falls on the two age-groups 25–35 and 35–45, and not on the later ages when the widowed are relatively most numerous.

The industry tables show that earthenware, china, etc. manufacture employed 5,358 males and 444 females in addition to the 40,424 males and 29,439 females referred to under this heading in the occupation tables. The male workers in connexion with the industry included 390 clay, etc. pit workers, 216 die, etc. makers, 322 bricklayers (including labourers), 208 carpenters, joiners (including labourers), 175 erectors, fitters, turners (including labourers), 615 engine drivers, stokers, firemen (not railway), 1,432 commercial clerks, 703 carmen, and 283 messengers, porters, watchmen; there were also 339 female commercial clerks returned in connexion with this industry.

Glass Manufacture.—As in 1901, the Glass Workers have again at this census been classified under three headings—"Sheet, Plate Glass Manufacture," "Glass Bottle Manufacture," and "Other Workers in Glass Manufacture." Putting the three headings together, the number of persons returned as engaged in Glass Manufacture was 30,987, of whom 2,739 were females, as against 30,081 persons in 1901, of whom 2,363 were females. This represents an increase of 3·0 per cent., which is much smaller than the increase of 15·0 per cent. at the previous census.

Taking the headings separately, we find that in Sheet and Plate Glass Making there were 6,109 persons, against 5,577 in 1901, an increase of 9·5 per cent.; in Glass Bottle Making, 13,069 persons, against 11,339, an increase of 15·3 per cent.; and under the heading "Other Workers in Glass Manufacture," 11,809 persons, against 13,165, a decrease of 10·3 per cent. It must, however, be borne in mind that although in many instances the nature of the return did not permit a proper distinction to be made among the three headings, improvement in this respect has probably taken place, and the decrease in the indefinite class may be the result. The following table shows the counties chiefly concerned in glass manufacture:—

The number of "additional workers" returned in connexion with the various branches of glass manufacture amounted to 3,893 males and 276 females, the males including 253 blacksmiths, 275 erectors, fitters, turners (including labourers), 228 bricklayers (including labourers), 269 engine drivers, stokers, firemen (not railway), 981 commercial clerks, 309 carmen, and 302 messengers, porters, watchmen.

Plaster, Cement—Manufacture.—The numbers engaged in the manufacture of Plaster and Cement reached 9,942, as against 9,661 in 1901, an increase of only 2·9 per cent. as compared with the very high percentage (77·9) of increase recorded at the last census; in Kent, where 4,946 of the workers were enumerated, there was a decline of 413, or 7·7 per cent.

The number of persons employed in connexion with plaster and cement manufacture, as shown by the industry tabulation, amounted to 15,779, the "additional workers" contributing as many as 5,837 to the total. The principal occupations followed in connexion with this industry included coopers, etc. (824), stone miners, quarriers (392), clay, sand, chalk, etc. pit workers (598), blacksmiths (177), erectors, fitters, turners (including labourers) (351), engine drivers, stokers, firemen—not railway (671), carpenters (including labourers) (177), bricklayers (including labourers). (244), commercial clerks (501), bargemen (354), carmen, etc. (222), and railway men (196).

XV. Chemicals, Oil, Grease, Soap, Resin, etc.—In connexion with the manufacture and sale of chemicals, oil, grease, etc. there were returned 171,983 persons, of whom 135,113 were males and 36,870 females. In order to compare with the figures for 1901 it is necessary to add the 1,451 males and 2,326 females engaged in elastic web manufacture and the 1,008 male and 1,009 female celluloid—makers, workers, who, at that census, were classed to india-rubber manufacture, but are now included in Orders XVIII. and XXII. respectively. With these additions there were 137,572 males and 40,205 females, as against 101,938 males and 26,702 females in 1901, the percentage of increase being 35·0 for the former and 50·6 for the latter, or 38·2 for the two sexes together. Excluding the headings for Dealers and for Chemists and Druggists, who are mainly dealers, there were 98,598 males and 33,246 females—increases of 32,530 males and 10,679 females—or 49·2 per cent. and 49·5 per cent. respectively. With the exception of the headings for Gunpowder, Explosive Substance—Manufacture, and Cartridge, Explosive Article—Manufacture, all of the headings show an increase in the numbers.

Explosives and Matches.—The numbers engaged in the manufacture of Gunpowder, Explosive Substance, etc., show a decline of 1,029, or 28·7 per cent., the figures being 2,561 (of whom 2,322 were males) in 1911, and 3,590 (of whom 3,084 were males) in 1901. The numbers employed in Cartridge, Fireworks, etc. making also show a decrease, having dropped from 7,379 to 6,718. It is, however, a reduction in the number of males that is answerable for this decline, the number of females having remained stationary, whilst the males numbered only 2,934, as against 3,613, a decrease of 18·8 per cent. The numbers under both these headings were, however, inflated in 1901 owing to the South African War. In Lucifer Match Making there were engaged 2,700 persons (of whom 1,957 were females), as against 2,406 persons (of whom 1,865 were females) in 1901, an advance of 294, or 12·2 per cent., in the total number.

Salt, Drugs, and Other Chemicals and Compounds.—The numbers returned under the headings Manufacturing Chemists and Alkali Manufacture were 28,610 and 11,952 persons respectively, as against 17,515 and 9,705 in 1901, the increases per cent. being 63·3 for Manufacturing Chemists and 23·2 for Alkali Manufacture. About one-fourth of the persons returned under the former heading were females, who showed an increase of over 80 per cent. since 1901. Of the 11,952 persons under the heading Alkali Manufacture (which is almost exclusively a male occupation) 4,880 were enumerated in Lancashire, 4,633 in Cheshire, and 1,515 in Durham; in 1901 there were 4,543, 3,400, and 966 respectively in these counties. In Lancashire, however, there were also 4,588 persons classified as Manufacturing Chemists, as against 3,161 in 1901, and it is possible that there is some overlapping between the two headings, for it was found that the returns did not always give information as to whether the worker was engaged in Alkali Works or otherwise, the schedule frequently containing no further information than "Labourer—Chemical Works," and it was only possible to decide under which heading the person should be classified by a general survey of the works in the locality. For purposes of comparison it is therefore advisable to group the two headings, the resulting totals for the whole country being 33,473 males and 7,089 females in 1911, and 23,293 males and 3,927 females in 1901, the percentage increases for the two sexes being 43·7 and 80·5 respectively.

Both chemical manufacture and alkali manufacture employed a large number of workers in addition to those classified to the occupational headings. Altogether 15,064 males and 1,697 females were returned as additional workers in connexion with these two industries, including, among males, 3,713 commercial clerks; 1,586 engine drivers, stokers, firemen (not railway); 1,195 erectors, fitters, turners (including labourers); 809 carpenters, joiners (including labourers); 808 coopers; 579 plumbers; 556 bricklayers (including labourers); 417 blacksmiths; 926 carmen, etc.; and 812 messengers, porters, watchmen. There were also 1,111 female clerks and 221 female cardboard box makers employed in connexion with chemical manufacture.

Chemists and Druggists, who numbered 32,241, were more by 3,793, or 13·3 per cent., than at the previous census. The females claim the larger share of this increase, having risen from 3,105 to 5,390, or by 73·6 per cent., whilst the males have only advanced by 1,508, or by 6·0 per cent. Adding the 2,349 male and 1,624 female clerks, the 3,082 commercial travellers, the 5,724 messengers, porters, watchmen, and the other " additional workers " (868 males and 326 females) returned as employed by chemists and druggists to the 32,241 persons classified under that heading, gives the total number of dealers in chemicals and drugs with their employees as 46,214 (38,874 males and 7,340 females).

Salt Makers, numbering 3,457, have advanced by 14·9 per cent. on the 3,008 returned in 1901, Cheshire accounting for 2,248, as against 1,841 at the last census.

India Rubber, Gutta Percha—Workers.—The workers in India Rubber, etc. numbered 19,185 (13,718 males and 5,467 females), but in order to compare with the figures for 1901 it will be necessary to add the Elastic Web Makers, now shown as a separate heading in Order XVIII., Sub-order 5, and the Celluloid—Makers, Workers, now in XXII. 3. The comparable figures are then 24,979 (of whom 16,177 were males and 8,802 females) and 12,264 (of whom 7,673 were males and 4,591 females), an increase of 103·7 per cent. in the total, or 110·8 per cent. for males and 91·7 per cent. for females. The industry tables show 2,065 male and 586 female commercial clerks out of a total of 4,629 additional workers connected with India Rubber, Gutta Percha Works.

Waterproof Goods Makers, numbering 4,225 males and 3,177 females, have increased by 21·6 per cent. for males and 14·4 per cent. for females, or 18·4 per cent. for both sexes together over the figures returned in 1901. Of 1,145 waterproof goods makers returned as employed in connexion with other industries, no fewer than 986 were in railway companies' service.

Colouring Matter, Oil, Grease, Soap, Resin, etc.—The remaining headings of the Order, which are more or less of a miscellaneous type, are presented in the following table :—

	1901.			1911.			Increase per cent.
	Persons.	Males.	Females.	Persons.	Males.	Females.	Persons.	Males.	Females.

Of the 11,110 persons classified under the heading Dye, Paint, etc. Manufacture, 1,107 males and 1,232 females were enumerated in the County Borough of Kingston upon Hull, 2,016 males and 469 females in London, and 1,246 males and 312 females in Lancashire. Kingston upon Hull is also an important centre of Oil Milling and Refining, having 2,545 males so engaged ; this figure is, however, closely approached by the 2,496 males similarly engaged in Liverpool. Soap—Boilers, Makers are principally to be found in Lancashire and Cheshire, 2,470 males and 1,297 females having been returned in the former county, and 1,326 males and 923 females in the latter county ; the chief centres were Liverpool with 348 males and 449 females, Warrington with 638 males and 276 females, and Birkenhead (and the adjoining urban district of Lower Bebington) with 1,013 males and 837 females.

In connexion with these manufactures the additional workers were principally clerks, numbering 5,328 males and 1,070 females ; carmen, etc., 1,453 ; and engine drivers, stokers, firemen (not railway), 1,392 males. Soap Manufacturers employed 312 wooden box, packing case makers (males) and 572 cardboard box makers (females); and Oil Millers, Refiners, etc. employed 405 coopers. Oil and Colourmen, together with other dealers in this Order (except Chemists, Druggists), numbered 13,692 persons (12,123 males and 1,569 females), against 11,557 (10,527 males and 1,030 females) in 1901. The total in 1911, inclusive of employees classified to other headings in the occupation tables, was 24,637 males and 2,125 females, these numbers including clerks (2,835 males and 484 females), commercial travellers (5,609 males), messengers, porters, watchmen (1,458 males), and carmen, motor van, etc. drivers (1,915 males).

XVI. Skins, Leather, Hair, and Feathers.—The total number of workers and dealers in Skins, Leather, Hair, and Feathers rose from 105,341 in 1901 to 113,680 in 1911. Excluding the dealers, there were 76,198 male and 28,912 female workers engaged in the occupations included in this Order; the males having increased by 2·0 per cent. and the females by 16·7 per cent. since 1901.

The aggregate number returned under the four headings, "Furriers, Skinners," "Tanners," "Curriers," and "Leather Goods, Portmanteau, Bag, Strap, etc. Makers," was 59,341, an increase of 21·8 per cent. over the number returned in 1901. The increase is least marked in the case of Tanners (10·4 per cent.) and greatest among "Furriers and Skinners" (45·9 per cent.); under the other two headings, which were not separated in 1901, the increase was 17·6 per cent. The number of foreigners who were returned as "Furriers, Skinners" increased by 75·2 per cent., and amounted to 2,067 out of a total of 14,199 in 1911, against 1,180 out of a total of 9,731 in 1901.

The manufacture of Saddlery and Harness, etc., employed 20·5 per cent. fewer persons in 1911 than in 1901—a fall from 30,684 to 24,388; distinguishing the sexes, the males have declined from 25,954 to 20,911, or by 19·4 per cent., and the females from 4,730 to 3,477, or by 26·5 per cent. In Walsall County Borough, where 4,133 males and 2,398 females were employed in this manufacture, the former have decreased by 6·8 per cent. and the latter by 24·9 per cent. from the exceptionally high numbers employed at the date of the 1901 census in meeting army requirements, but these decreases are practically balanced by increases in the numbers employed as Curriers and Leather Goods, etc. Makers.

In London and the adjoining counties of Middlesex and Essex, where Saddlery and Harness Making is almost exclusively a male occupation, there being only 207 females against 3,271 males, the latter have fallen by 1,898, or 36·7 per cent., since 1901. The following table gives for England and Wales the numbers at the several age-groups in 1901 and in 1911:—

SADDLERY AND HARNESS MAKERS.

——		Total.	10–	15–	20–	25–	35–	45–	55–	65 and upwards.
Males ...	1901	25,954	717	3,675	3,406	6,084	4,777	3,654	2,534	1,107
	1911	20,911	247	1,817	1,859	4,489	4,669	3,839	2,521	1,470
Females	1901	4,730	471	1,564	1,012	755	446	249	152	81
	1911	3,477	176	1,003	690	730	376	261	161	80

These figures show that the decline is practically confined to the ages below 35, and is most pronounced in the earliest years, the inference being that young persons are refraining from entering an occupation which has been adversely affected by the rapid increase in the production and use of motor vehicles.

The makers of Brushes and Brooms numbered 17,515 persons in 1911, against 16,264 in 1901. The increase of 7·7 per cent. shown by these figures is shared unequally by the two sexes, males having increased by 6·0 per cent. and females by 10·0 per cent. Although the proportion of females is still increasing in this occupation, their advance is less conspicuous than it was at the previous census, when their increase over the number returned in 1891 amounted to 13·6 per cent., while the males declined by 4·4 per cent. Quill and Feather Dressers have not maintained the high rate of increase (35·4 per cent.) recorded in 1901, the number of females, 3,372, being exactly the same in 1911 as it was ten years earlier, while the males have only increased from 458 to 494.

The totals shown under the several headings in this Order are not modified to any great extent by the industry tabulation, the additional workers, comprising principally clerks and messengers, being few in number except those returned in connexion with dealing businesses. The number of persons classified as dealers in skins, leather, hair, and feathers was 8,570 (against 5,861 in 1901), but the industry tables show a further 4,330 males and 391 females as employed in this connexion, these numbers including clerks (1,291 males and 336 females), commercial travellers (2,138 males), messengers, porters, watchmen (568 males), and carmen, etc. (242 males).

XVII. Paper, Prints, Books, and Stationery.—The workers and dealers classified under this Order numbered 340,960, of whom 219,651 were males and 121,309 were females. Some changes in the constitution of the Order have been made since 1901, which must be taken into account before the totals at the two censuses can be compared. "Circular, Envelope—Addressers, etc." and "Bill Posters" have been transferred from the heading "Other Workers in Paper, etc." to Order XXII., in which they now form separate headings of the sub-order "Advertising," which also contains the heading "Advertising, Bill Posting—Agents," formerly included with "Newspaper Agents, etc." in this Order. Further, the 2,771 "Stereotypers, Electrotypers" shown as a sub-heading of "Printers" include a number of electrotype, stereotype—founders, finishers, moulders, etc., who in 1901 would have been classified under the heading "Type—Cutters, Founders" in Order X. If the numbers under the three headings in the "Advertising" sub-order, referred to above, be added to Order XVII., the total is raised to 348,027 persons (226,451 males and 121,576 females), compared with the 278,957 persons (188,057 males and 90,900 females) comprised in the Order in 1901, the rate of increase on these totals being 24·8 per cent. (20·4 per cent. for males and 33·7 per cent. for females). Dividing the Order, as thus modified, into three groups—(1) Workers in Paper and Stationery, (2) Printers, Lithographers, Bookbinders, and (3) Publishers and Dealers, the numbers at the two censuses were as follows :—

	1901.			1911.			Increase per cent.
	Persons.	Males.	Females.	Persons.	Males.	Females.	Persons.	Males.	Females.
Workers in Paper and Stationery	74,967	29,980	44,987	92,883	37,927	54,956	23·9	26·5	22·2
Printers, Lithographers, Bookbinders	149,793	119,834	29,959	184,075	140,968	43,107	22·9	17·6	43·9
Publishers and Dealers (including Stationers and Newsagents)	54,197	38,243	15,954	71,069	47,556	23,513	31·1	24·4	47·4

Workers in Paper and Stationery.—In this group are included persons engaged in the manufacture of paper, cardboard, stationery, paper bags, cardboard boxes, and various other paper and cardboard articles. They were classified under the following headings :—

	1901.			1911.
	Persons.	Males.	Females.	Persons.	Males.	Females.
Paper Manufacture	24,210	15,359	8,851	24,844	17,087	7,757

Envelope Makers	3,513	370	3,143	3,831	515	3,316
Paper Bag Makers	28,519	3,310	25,209	5,869	583	5,286
Cardboard Box Makers				30,569	4,068	26,501

Circular, Envelope—Addressers, etc.	7,327	4,528	2,799	267	123	144
Bill Posters				3,273	3,273	.

It will be seen that the number of makers of paper of all kinds (including cardboard and pasteboard) was practically stationary, the increase among males being nearly balanced by a decline among females. Probably some part of the recorded decrease among females may be due to the more extended use of machinery, but part of it may also be associated with the fuller description of occupation in 1911, which in many cases enabled paper sorters, cutters, counters, etc. in the employ of stationery manufacturers, stationers, and paper dealers to be classified to the latter headings instead of to paper manufacture. The local distribution of paper manufacture is indicated by the following figures :—

	1901.		1911.			1901.		1911.
	Males.	Females.	Males.	Females		Males.	Females.	Males.	Females.
London ...	1,010	736	519	406	Warwickshire	298	327	331	257

In connexion with Paper Manufacture the industry tables show 5,493 males and 585 females as "additional workers." These included commercial clerks (1,484 males and 416 females); engine drivers, stokers, firemen—not railway (1,077 males); and erectors, fitters, turners (including labourers), and others in engineering (1,094 males).

Paper Stainers increased from 2,319 to 3,724, or by 60·6 per cent., against a decline of 8·6 per cent. in the preceding intercensal period. The largest numbers were enumerated in Lancashire (1,397 in 1911 against 730 in 1901), London (980 against 793), and Middlesex (486 against 275). The additional workers returned as employed in connexion with Paper Staining included 423 male clerks and 266 roller engravers, block cutters.

The persons included under remaining headings of the group of Workers in Paper and Stationery increased from 48,438 to 64,315, males having risen from 12,589 to 17,598, or by 39·8 per cent., and females from 35,849 to 46,717, or by 30·3 per cent. Envelope makers increased by only 9·1 per cent., but this occupation is so much allied to Stationery Manufacture that the separate total is of doubtful value. Taking the two together, the numbers increased from 12,592 to 18,969, or by 50·6 per cent., the males from 4,751 to 7,107, or by 49·6 per cent., and the females from 7,841 to 11,862, or by 51·3 per cent. Nearly three-fifths of the total persons were enumerated in London and the adjoining counties of Middlesex and Essex; the numbers in these and the other counties where the industry was chiefly carried on were as follows :—

	1901.		1911.			1901.		1911.
	Males.	Females.	Males.	Females.		Males.	Females.	Males.	Females.
London ...	2,140	4,817	2,631	5,608	Hertfordshire	149	405	278	473
Middlesex ...	179	148	546	897	Gloucestershire	120	231	248	559
Essex	222	243	632	854	Lancashire ...	1,320	689	1,710	1,140
	2,541	5,208	3,809	7,359	Yorkshire, West Riding	119	336	217	682

Of the 1,710 males and 1,140 females returned in Lancashire, 1,323 males and 467 females were enumerated in Manchester and Salford, the preponderance of males in this district being doubtless due to their employment in pattern and show card work in connexion with the textile trade. Cardboard Box Makers and Paper

Bag Makers together increased from 28,519 to 36,438, or by 27·8 per cent. The largest numbers were enumerated in the following counties :—

	Cardboard Box and Paper Bag Makers.						Cardboard Box Makers, 1911.		Paper Bag Makers, 1911.
	Persons.		Males.		Females.
	1901.	1911.	1901.	1911.	1901.	1911.	Males.	Females.	Males.	Females.

There were also considerable numbers of cardboard box makers in Cheshire (950), Leicestershire (1,159), and Nottinghamshire (1,318), but very few paper bag makers.

The industry tables show that 1,294 clerks (779 males and 515 females), 761 printers, lithographers (478 males and 283 females), and 690 bookbinders (405 males and 285 females) were returned as employed in connexion with stationery, envelope, and paper bag making. Cardboard box making employed 201 male and 246 female clerks, 112 male and 43 female printers and lithographers, 201 carmen, and 285 messengers, porters, watchmen. Of the 4,068 male and 26,501 female cardboard box makers, 487 and 4,441 respectively were returned as employed in connexion with other industries.

Printers, Lithographers, Bookbinders.—The figures under the separate headings in this group at the two censuses were as follows :—

	1901.		1911.
	Males.	Females.	Males.	Females.
Printers :—
Hand Compositors	96,488	9,693	37,281	602
Machine Compositors			3,711	92
Printing Machine Minders			7,773	209
Stereotypers, Electrotypers			2,761	10
Others in Printing (including undefined) ...			63,736	21,462
Lithographers, Copper and Steel Plate Printers ...	10,682	1,043	12,746	2,283
Bookbinders	12,664	19,223	12,960	18,449

The result of sub-dividing the heading " Printers " into the five headings shown above has been very disappointing, the line " Others in Printing " including a large number of persons returned indefinitely. In London, for example, considerably more than one-fourth of the male employees so classified were returned simply as " Printers " without any indication of the process in which they were engaged, and there was also a large number returned as " Printers' Assistants."

The male printers increased from 96,488 to 115,262, or by 19·5 per cent., while the females rose from 9,693 to 22,375, or by 130·8 per cent. ; between 1891 and 1901 the rates of increase for the two sexes were 17·7 and 114·1 per cent. respectively. Some considerable portion of the increase among females, as compared with 1901, is due to the transfer from the heading " Bookbinders" of women who were returned by occupational names used in the bookbinding trade (and were therefore classed to that heading in 1901), but were shown, by means of the industry column (column 11) of the schedule, in 1911 to be engaged in the printing trade, and were classified accordingly.

This probably accounts for the actual decline of female " Bookbinders " from 19,223 to 18,449, but the fact that the rate of increase between 1891 and 1901 was 34·9 per cent. for females, and that the rate of increase for males for that period was 10·2 per cent., against only 2·3 per cent. between 1901 and 1911, seems to indicate a falling-off in the demand for labour in the bookbinding trade. The figures for "Lithographers, Copper and Steel Plate Printers" show an increase of 19·3 per cent. for males and 118·9 per cent. for females, following increases of 15·8 and 123·3 per cent. respectively between 1891 and 1901.

As was pointed out in 1901, London still continues to be the chief centre of the printing trade, although in a less degree than formerly. Taking the adjoining counties of Middlesex and Essex, together with London, as representing roughly the workers employed in the metropolitan area, these comprised 42 per cent. of the printers, 37 per cent. of the lithographers, and 52 per cent. of the bookbinders in 1911, against 43 per cent., 39 per cent., and 59 per cent. respectively in 1901. In rural districts only 18 per 10,000 of the males aged 10 years and upwards were returned as "Printers and Lithographers," against 116 per 10,000 in the urban districts, and the highest proportions, outside the metropolitan area (in which the proportion was 211 per 10,000), were recorded in some of the large towns, reaching 216 per 10,000 in Exeter, 218 in Bristol, 252 in Reading, and 386 in Oxford.

In addition to the 128,008 male and 24,658 female printers and lithographers there were 16,611 male and 5,762 female additional workers returned as employed in connexion with printing and lithography. These additional workers included commercial clerks (4,868 males and 2,813 females), messengers, etc. (5,406 males and 320 females), commercial travellers (2,250 males), bookbinders (1,223 males and 2,360 females).

Publishers, and Dealers in Paper and Stationery.—This group comprises the following headings :—

There is some uncertainty as to how persons in most of these occupations, which overlap in many cases, return themselves at successive censuses, but according to the figures tabulated it would appear that by far the greatest increase has been among the newspaper agents, etc., with whom must be associated, for purposes of comparison, the new headings for "Newspaper Publishers" and "Advertising, etc. Agents."

The number of persons returned as connected with the book, etc. publishing and selling trades was raised from 16,864 to 26,729 by the addition of the workers who are classified under other headings in the occupation tables ; these additional workers included commercial clerks (3,934 males and 1,819 females), commercial travellers (1,253 males), messengers, porters, watchmen (1,152 males), bookbinders (168 males and 314 females), and printers and lithographers (289 males).

The numbers returned as connected with newspaper publishing included, in addition to the 2,781 males and 99 females classed under this heading in the occupation tables, 18,584 males and 1,206 females, of whom 7,956 males were printers ; 4,900 males and 137 females were editors, journalists, reporters, etc. ; 2,921 males and 712 females were commercial clerks, and 1,136 males were messengers, porters, watchmen. More than a third of the total number of persons engaged in this industry were enumerated in London and the adjoining counties.

XVIII. Textile Fabrics.—The number of persons included in this Order was 1,317,565 (571,411 males and 746,154 females), of whom 1,126,426 (470,090 males and 656,336 females) were classified as engaged in textile manufacture or in textile bleaching, printing, dyeing, etc., and 191,139 (101,321 males and 89,818 females) as dealers, including 150,968 drapers (66,362 males and 84,606 females), who, as they have become to such a large extent dealers in dress, will be dealt with as in 1901 in combination with the Dress Order (XIX.). Excluding the persons engaged in

"Elastic Web Manufacture," who were formerly classed with "India Rubber, Gutta Percha Workers" (Order XVI.), a comparison of the numbers returned in 1901 and 1911 as engaged in textile manufacture, and in textile bleaching, printing, dyeing, etc., gives the following result :—

Before 1901 there were separate headings for "Cotton, Calico—Printers, Dyers, Bleachers" (including Calenderers and Finishers), "Wool, Woollen Goods—Dyers, Printers," and "Silk—Dyers, Printers"; bleachers, printers, dyers, etc. in all other textile fabrics were included with the manufacturers, and when the nature of the material was not stated were classed as "Dyers, Scourers, Bleachers, Calenderers (undefined)." In 1901, at the suggestion of the Home Office and the Board of Trade, and in order to bring the census classification into line with that of those departments, Bleachers, Printers, Dyers, Calenderers, Finishers, etc. were excluded from the headings relating to the manufacture of the fabrics and were shown together in a separate sub-order. The bleaching, printing, dyeing and finishing processes are largely carried on in works quite separate from the manufacturing processes, and the workers in the finishing processes cannot always be definitely associated with a particular fabric. If, however, it is desired to consider the number of bleachers, dyers, etc. in cotton or in wool and worsted in relation to the numbers engaged in the manufacturing processes, a rough approximation could be obtained by assuming that all those in Lancashire were connected with cotton and all those in the West Riding of Yorkshire with wool and worsted.

By adding the numbers of Dealers in Textile Fabrics other than the Drapers, Linen Drapers, Mercers, it is possible to compare the total and the rate of increase with those recorded at successive censuses since 1851, as shown in a table given in the 1901 Report, which we reproduce with the figures for 1911 added. The table also gives the numbers and rates of increase at ages 15 and upwards, as the total numbers have been considerably affected for purposes of comparison by changes in regard to the employment of children.

The above table shows that the rate of increase for persons of both sexes (14·0 per cent.) in 1901–1911 was higher than in any of the five preceding intercensal periods, and was higher in the case of males than of females. In 1891–1901 there had been a decline of 4·8 per cent., which, however, was accounted for mainly by restriction of child labour; and if comparison of the two periods is made on the basis of persons aged 15 years and upwards, the decline in the earlier period is reduced to 0·8 per cent., and the increase in the later period is raised to 15·5 per cent.

The following table shows that the only textile manufactures which had increased between 1891 and 1901, apart from textile bleaching, printing, dyeing, etc., for which the figures are not strictly comparable), were lace and "rough textiles." Since 1901, however, a remarkable change has occurred, and nearly all the industries have increased. All the headings which showed a decline between 1891 and 1901, showed either a reduced rate of decline or an actual increase between 1901 and 1911; but the rough textile group showed a slightly reduced rate of increase, the differences in the constituent headings varying very considerably. The table gives the numbers employed in the principal textile manufactures in 1901 and 1911, and the decennial rate of increase or decrease at the two censuses for persons of all ages and for those aged 15 years and upwards:—

Cotton Manufacture.—The manufacture of Cotton, which gave employment to 605,177 persons (233,380 males and 371,797 females), is, in respect of the numbers employed, the most important manufacturing industry of the country. It was a matter of serious concern that in 1901 for the first time the total showed a decrease of 3·1 per cent., and at ages 15 and upwards the number showed an increase of only 1·9 per cent. The quantity of raw cotton imported into the United Kingdom in the five years ending 1901 was, according to the Statistical Abstract of the Board of Trade, 1·9 per cent. lower than in the five years ending 1891, and the returns of the Chief Inspector of Factories had shown that the numbers of persons employed had decreased each year from 1895 to 1901. Since that date these returns have shown only a very slight increase in the numbers between 1901 and 1904 (0·8 per cent.), but a fairly large increase (10·3 per cent.) between 1904 and 1907—no later figures are available from this source. The census figures for 1911 show an increase in the ten years amounting to 14·4 per cent., which, as will be seen from the following table, was higher than that in any previous intercensal period since 1861, and, as is shown above, the increase was greater for workers aged 15 and upwards than for those of all ages.

* The numbers for 1861 and 1871 include the "Retired."

Comparing the two years 1910 and 1911 with 1900 and 1901, there was an increase of 16·4 per cent. in the quantity of raw cotton imported into the United Kingdom, an increase of 26·7 per cent. in the quantity of cotton yarn and of 21·9 per cent. in the quantity of cotton piece goods exported, and an increase of 59·1 per cent. in the declared value of the exports of yarn and piece goods together.*

The age-constitution of the cotton operatives at the three censuses 1891, 1901, and 1911 is shown in the following table, and reveals some striking differences in the rates of increase or decrease at the various ages. Thus, in 1891–1901, while the total number of males declined by 7·7 per cent., the numbers in each decennial age-period from 25 to 65 showed an increase. In 1901–1911, on the other hand, the males at each age-period (except 10–14) showed increases, the loss in numbers at ages 15 to 25 between 1891 and 1901 being converted into a substantial gain between 1901 and 1911; the rates of increase at the later ages were also remarkably high. Among females the most striking features are the great increase during the latter period at ages 25 and upwards, and the extent to which the rise at ages 25–45 among the married or widowed has exceeded that among the unmarried. In view of the general prosperity of the industry, as denoted by the increased numbers employed, the increase of married women may be due to a higher marriage rate among the female operatives and to married women re-entering the industry in greater numbers. It is notorious that employers have been put to great straits for lack of hands, and evidence of the extent to which all available labour has been drawn into the mills may be found in the remarkable rates of increase in the numbers of elderly spinsters employed. The younger unmarried women were presumably employed as fully as possible already; so their numbers have not greatly increased, but older women who were not formerly employed to nearly the same extent seem now to have been called up as a veteran reserve.

The various processes of Cotton Manufacture, which had previously been shown under one heading, were in 1901 divided into four defined headings and one residual heading; some further sub-division has been attempted in 1911, the "strippers and grinders" having been distinguished from others in "card and blowing room" processes, and the "undefined" workers having been separated from workers in processes for which no special heading is shown in the classification. Distinction according to the process of manufacture is, however, somewhat unsatisfactory, particularly as some of the processes preparatory to weaving are completed in spinning mills, and are accordingly classified to "spinning processes"; moreover, there is a good deal of uncertainty owing to the use of occupational terms common to several processes. We do not attempt any comparisons, as between the two censuses, of the numbers employed in the different processes, as it is probable that differences in the method of return may be responsible for changes between the headings, column 11 of the schedule having been of material assistance in distinguishing the various processes and thus leading to more reliable sub-division than was previously possible. The following figures show the local distribution of the total males and females engaged in cotton manufacture at the last two censuses :—

No less than 83·2 per cent. of the total persons engaged in cotton manufacture in 1911 were enumerated in Lancashire. In comparing the numbers at the two censuses it must be observed that an attempt has been made in 1911, as in 1891, to exclude "Thread Manufacture," which in 1901 was, in the absence of the information now given in column 11 of the schedule, largely included under cotton. The 1,679 males and 4,315 females engaged in thread manufacture in 1911 were distributed as follows :—

——	Males.	Females.	——	Males.	Females.
Lancashire	178	764	Cheshire	965	1,609

Fustian Cutting, which had declined by 31·4 per cent. between 1891 and 1901, further decreased by 24·4 per cent. between 1901 and 1911, the males falling from 2,060 to 1,252, and the females from 3,552 to 2,988. Five-sixths of the total number of persons engaged in this occupation were enumerated in Cheshire, Lancashire, or the West Riding of Yorkshire.

The numbers employed in connexion with cotton manufacture included, in addition to the 233,380 males and 371,797 females classified as engaged in the various processes of the manufacture, 17,771 males and 1,591 females who were following other occupations. The largest numbers of these additional workers were, among males, clerks (5,796) ; messengers, porters, watchmen (1,361) ; carmen, motor van, etc. drivers (880) ; engine drivers, stokers, firemen—not railway (4,532) ; textile machinery fittings makers (1,395) ; erectors, fitters, turners, and their labourers (502); blacksmiths (286) ; and others in general engineering and machine making (1,824). Among the female additional workers there were 469 commercial clerks and 703 textile machinery fittings makers. A few cotton operatives were returned as employed in connexion with other industries, mostly other branches of textile manufacture. After deducting these, the net total of persons employed in the cotton manufacturing industry was 623,825, of whom 250,991 were males and 372,834 were females.

Wool and Worsted Manufacture.—Following a decline of 13·5 per cent. between 1891 and 1901 in the numbers engaged in this manufacture, there was an increase of 6·2 per cent. between 1901 and 1911. The fluctuations in the numbers at the six censuses 1861 to 1911 are shown below :—

The numbers of workers at the several ages as returned at the last three censuses show that, as in the case of the cotton operatives, the fluctuations in the totals have affected the different ages very unequally. Between 1891 and 1901 the decline in the workers in wool and worsted manufacture was proportionally greatest among children under 15 years of age; among males very large decreases were also shown at ages 15–25, but among females the decreases at these ages were much smaller in proportion to the total decrease at all ages. Between 1901 and 1911 there was a slight increase in the numbers of children under 15; among males at ages 15–25 there was a partial recovery of the large loss sustained in the earlier intercensal period, but among females there was a continued decline at these ages; and while the number of unmarried women was practically stationary, the number of married or widowed women increased by 21·6 per cent. The figures are shown in the following table :—

It will be noted that the diminished entry of males at ages under 25 ten years earlier is reflected by a fall in the number of males at 25–35 at this census, also, that, as in the cotton industry, there has been a very large increase in the number of elderly spinsters employed.

The principal seat of the woollen industry is the West Riding of Yorkshire, where 88·7 per cent. of the total persons engaged were enumerated; the local distribution in 1901 and 1911 of the two sexes was as follows :—

Wool and Worsted Manufacture is shown by the industry tables as giving employment to 10,410 males and 826 females in addition to the 95,531 males and 127,148 females returned as engaged in the manufacturing processes; on the other hand, 389 male and 337 female wool workers were stated to be employed in connexion with other industries. Thus, the net total number of persons working in or in connexion with Wool and Worsted Manufacture was 233,189 (105,552 males and 127,637 females). The additional male workers in this industry included 2,996 clerks; 1,035 carmen, motor van, etc. drivers; 641 messengers, porters, watchmen; 2,413 engine drivers, stokers, firemen (not railway); 382 textile machinery fittings makers; 287 erectors, fitters, turners, and their labourers; 208 blacksmiths; 1,135 others in general engineering and machine making; and 398 dyers. Of the 826 female additional workers, 424 were clerks.

Silk Manufacture, which occupied more than 120,000 persons in 1851, employed less than one-fourth of that number in 1911. The 9,087 males and the 20,556 females returned at the latter date were respectively 12·5 and 16·0 per cent. less than the numbers returned in 1901, which in turn had shown a decline of 36·1 and 24·9 per cent. from the numbers at the preceding census. In spite of the total decrease among males in 1901–1911, there was a considerable rise in the number at age 20–25, and smaller increases were shown at ages 15–20 and 45–55; among females every age-group showed decline. The fluctuations during the last intercensal period in the counties containing the largest numbers of workers in silk manufacture are shown below :—

The additional workers in silk manufacture included, among the males, 407 in general engineering and machine making; 192 engine drivers, stokers, firemen (not railway); 177 bleachers, printers, dyers; 156 messengers, porters, watchmen; and 516 clerks. The female additional workers included 188 clerks. Altogether 1,738 males and 426 females were added by the industry tabulation, and the net total employed in Silk Manufacture, after excluding the few silk workers in other industries, was raised to 31,786 (10,809 males and 20,977 females).

Flax, Linen Manufacture employed only 4,017 persons (1,087 males and 2,930 females), but, allowing for the inclusion in the 1901 figures under this heading of some persons engaged in thread manufacture, showed practically no reduction between the two censuses, though in the previous ten years the number had declined by 45 per cent. Of the total engaged in this occupation, 1,614 were enumerated in Yorkshire (West Riding), 1,061 in Lancashire, 356 in Yorkshire (North Riding), and 292 in Cumberland.

The "rough textile" group, comprising the manufacture of Hemp, Jute, Cocoa Fibre, Rope, Mats, Canvas, Sailcloth, etc., employed 26,714 persons in 1911, against 24,336 in 1901, the increase being 9·8 per cent., against 11·0 per cent. in the preceding ten years. The numbers of the two sexes, however, have varied widely, for while the males actually decreased by 7·2 per cent. in 1891–1901 and increased by only 1·6 per cent. in 1901–1911, the females increased by 39·2 per cent. in the former period and by 18·1 per cent. in the latter. Complete separation of the headings in this group is not possible, and comparison of the figures at the two censuses may be affected thereby; as they stand, however, the figures indicate a decline of about 50 per cent. in hemp, jute, and cocoa fibre manufacture, very little variation in the number of mat makers, and a considerable increase in rope, twine, and cord makers (10·6 per cent.), and in canvas, sailcloth, etc. manufacture (32·2 per cent.). The proportions of the two sexes engaged in rope, etc. making have changed considerably since 1891; at that census there were 353 men to 100 women, in 1901 the proportion fell to 212, and in 1911 it further declined to 153.

Of the 3,168 males and 7,906 females engaged in canvas, sailcloth, sacking, net, etc. manufacture, 583 males and 2,038 females were returned as employed in connexion with various other industries; probably many of them were engaged in bag and sack making or repairing, but no fewer than 1,128 of the females were returned in connexion with the fishing industry, and these would be mostly engaged in making or repairing nets.

Hosiery Manufacture, which had shown an increase of 21·6 per cent. between 1881 and 1891, and a decrease of 1·5 per cent. between 1891 and 1901, increased by 16·5 per cent. between 1901 and 1911. The increase during the last period was only 5·6 per cent. among the workers under 15 years of age, against 17·4 per cent. among those aged 15 and upwards, and, as will be seen from the following table, there has been at successive censuses an increasing preponderance of females in this occupation :—

HOSIERY MANUFACTURE.

YEAR.	Persons.	Males.	Females.	Increase (+) or Decrease (−) per cent.
				Persons.	Males.	Females.
1881	40,372	18,862	21,510	.	.	.

1911	56,360	14,929	41,431	+16·5	+ 7·5	+20·2

More than half—31,377—of the persons returned under this heading were enumerated in Leicestershire ; a further 11,982 were enumerated in Nottinghamshire, and 6,120 in Derbyshire. The number in Nottinghamshire showed but little advance since 1901, but those in Leicestershire and Derbyshire rose by 21·3 and 58·6 per cent. respectively ; in the only other two counties in which this manufacture was carried on to any extent, namely, Lancashire (1,799 persons) and Yorkshire West Riding (933 persons), decreases of 1·2 and 24·1 per cent. were recorded.

The additional workers returned in connexion with Hosiery Manufacture numbered 1,639 males (including 624 clerks, 381 in general engineering and machine making, and 167 messengers, etc.) and 707 females (including 274 clerks and 280 messengers, etc.).

Lace Manufacture.—The number of persons employed in this manufacture was 61,726 in 1851, but decreased at each successive census until 1891, when 34,746 persons were so returned ; in 1901 the number had risen to 36,439, or by 4·9 per cent., and in 1911 there was a further rise of 12·5 per cent. to 41,003. During the last period the males increased from 12,632 to 15,181, 20·2 per cent., against a decrease of 3·1 per cent. in the previous ten years ; and the females showed an increase from 23,807 to 25,822, or only 8·5 per cent., as compared with an increase of 9·6 per cent. The varying proportion of females in this occupation at the several censuses will be seen in the table on page cxli. It was shown in the Report on the Census of 1901 that in the two counties of Nottingham and Derby, where lace is made principally by machinery, there had been continuous increase since 1871, while in Bedfordshire, Buckinghamshire, and Northamptonshire, where lace is principally hand-made, and where the industry is practically limited to females, there had been continuous decrease ; some lace-making by machinery is carried on in Devonshire and Somersetshire, and the figures for these seven counties given in the following table show how the tendency of the one branch of the manufacture to increase and of the other to decrease has persisted in the last intercensal period :—

In addition to the 15,181 males and 25,822 females shown above as employed in Lace Manufacture, there were 1,956 males and 1,011 females following various occupations in connexion with the industry ; they included clerks (780 males and 370 females), messengers, etc. (208 males and 468 females), engine drivers, stokers, firemen—not railway (239 males), and erectors, fitters, turners, and their labourers, and others in general engineering and machine making (480 males).

Carpet, Rug, Felt Manufacture.—The number of persons classified under this heading was 15,302 (6,982 males and 8,320 females) in 1911, against 14,802 (7,150 males and 7,652 females) in 1901. The total increase of 3·4 per cent. followed a considerable decline in the previous ten years ; and, as was the case at every census since 1861, the ratio of females to males showed an increase (see table on page cxli.), for the number of males declined by 2·3 per cent. since 1901, while the number of females rose by 8·7 per cent. These manufactures are carried on principally in Worcestershire (mainly carpets), Yorkshire West Riding (mainly carpets and rugs), and Lancashire (mainly felt). The totals for these counties in 1901 and 1911 were :—

Administrative Counties (with associated County Boroughs).	1901.			1911.			Increase (+) or Decrease (−) per cent.

The industry tables show that the total number of persons employed in Carpet, etc. Manufacture was 18,027, including 1,011 bleachers, dyers, printers (863 males and 148 females) ; 429 workers in cotton, wool, flax, and other fibrous materials (160 males and 269 females) ; 447 male clerks ; and 272 males in general engineering and machine making.

Textile Bleaching, Printing, Dyeing, and Finishing (including Garment Dyeing and Cleaning) gave employment in 1911 to 83,911 persons, of whom 69,616 were males ; in 1901 the numbers were 60,029 persons, of whom 51,469 were males ; thus the total increased by 39·8 per cent., males by 35·3 per cent. and females by 67·0 per cent. Some part of the apparent increase is due, however, to the more complete separation, in 1911, of workers in these processes rendered possible in many instances by the fuller information afforded by the industry column (column 11) of the schedule. The distribution of bleachers, dyers, etc., in the principal textile counties was as follows :—

Administrative Counties (with associated County Boroughs).	1901.			1911.
	Persons.	Males.	Females.	Persons.	Males.	Females.
Lancashire	32,088	26,975	5,113	43,206	35,573	7,633

Cheshire	3,688	3,290	398	5,214	4,677	537

In this sub-order are included the 766 male and 354 female dyers and the 1,641 male and 2,687 female calenderers, finishers, etc. returned as employed in garment dyeing and cleaning businesses ; it also includes the dyers, bleachers, etc. returned in connexion with wool and worsted manufacture (398 males), with carpet, rug, etc. manufacture (863 males and 148 females), and with various other industries (561 males and 84 females). Deducting the above numbers from the total classified to the sub-order, and adding the workers following various other occupations in connexion with textile bleaching, printing, dyeing, etc., gives a net total of 90,128 persons (78,395 males and 11,733 females) employed in this industry. The additional workers, included by means of the industry tabulation, comprised, among the males, 3,068 clerks ; 1,732 carmen, etc. ; 1,395 messengers, etc. ; 1,709 drivers, stokers, etc. of stationary engines ; 1,525 roller engravers, block cutters, and 1,638 in general engineering and machine making ; there were also 186 classified as engaged in scientific pursuits. Of the 711 female additional workers, 448 were clerks.

Dealers in Textile Fabrics (not Drapers).—The number of persons returned as dealers in textile fabrics (excluding drapers, linen drapers, mercers) was 40,171 (34,959 males and 5,212 females), but with the addition of the employees in this business who were classed to other occupations the number is raised to 51,675 males and 6,834 females. The additional male workers included 7,410 clerks, 5,697 commercial travellers, 2,577 messengers, porters, etc., and 353 carmen, etc.; the additional female workers included 1,106 clerks.

XIX. Dress.—The number of persons classified in this Order was 1,195,079, of whom 439,115 were males and 755,964 females, against 1,125,598 persons (414,637 males and 710,961 females) in 1901. In considering the group of persons actually engaged in the making or selling of articles of dress, however, we shall follow the course adopted in the reports of 1891 and 1901, and while omitting, on the one hand, the "Wig Makers, Hairdressers" (who are for the most part hairdressers engaged in personal service, and as such are allied to Order IV.), we shall, on the other hand, include the "Drapers, Linen Drapers, Mercers," who usually deal in the finished articles of dress as well as in the various fabrics comprised in Order XVIII. The total so arrived at engaged in making or dealing in articles of Dress increased from 1,225,599 persons (447,946 males and 777,653 females) in 1901 to 1,297,091 persons (461,208 males and 835,883 females) in 1911; the makers (as distinct from the dealers) increased from 1,026,142 to 1,047,105, but while the females rose from 689,956 to 716,039, or by 3·8 per cent., the males declined from 336,186 to 331,066, or by 1·5 per cent.

More than 91 per cent. of the males and nearly 94 per cent. of the females in the group of "makers" of articles of dress are shown under the following headings :—

Milliners.
Tailors (including Mantle Makers).
Dressmakers (including Costume Makers).
Stay, Corset—Makers.
Shirt Makers, Seamstresses (including Underclothing, Collar, Tie, etc. Makers).
Boot, Shoe—Makers.
Slipper Makers, Patten, Clog—Makers.

The low rate of increase, or the actual decrease, in the numbers under some of these headings is probably due in a measure to changes in the organization of the clothing trades tending to increased production on a large scale of ready-made articles by means of factory labour. In these industries there are, on the one hand, workers who make articles of dress simply to the order of the customer; they may work on their own account or may work for a retail or wholesale dealer in their own homes, or in workshops either of the firms selling the articles or of persons who take out work from the seller. There is, on the other hand, an increasing number of workers employed in factories, and engaged in producing in large quantities articles which are "manufactured with the advantage, so far as cheapness is concerned, of power-driven machines and minute sub-division of labour."* It is, doubtless, the growth of the latter class which accounts for the smallness of the increase in the number of male tailors, the majority being engaged in the "bespoke" trade, for the decline in female dressmakers, and shirtmakers, seamstresses, and partly for the declining rate of increase in female boot, etc. makers, though in this case, as will be shown later, some part of the falling-off is due to diminution in the rate of growth of factory production.

Drapers showed an increase of 11·3 per cent., but the gain was wholly among the females, whose numbers increased by 23·6 per cent., while the males declined by 1·3 per cent. Excluding Drapers, the Dealers in Dress advanced by 55·2 per cent., but, doubtless, a considerable part of the increase shown in most of the headings for dealers is due to more complete separation from "makers," and in the case of females the numbers are swollen by the inclusion of a larger proportion than formerly of relatives assisting in the business.

The number of persons shown by the industry tabulation as engaged in drapery businesses was 206,076 (94,196 males and 111,880 females), being 55,108 more than the number classified under the heading "Drapers, Linen Drapers, Mercers" in the occupation tables. The principal occupations of the 27,834 male and the 27,274 female additional workers may be summarised as follows :—

Males.		Females.
Messengers, Porters, Watchmen ...	11,198	Commercial Clerks	7,814
Commercial Clerks	7,067	Dressmakers	6,584
Commercial Travellers	5,953	Milliners	4,072
Carmen, Motor Van, etc. Drivers ...	1,029	Domestic Servants	5,365

* See Report of Board of Trade Enquiry into Earnings and Hours of Labour, Volume II.—Clothing Trades, page xxxvi.

It should be observed, however, that, on the one hand, many of these additional workers were probably connected with businesses which, not being concerned solely with the sale of drapery, might be regarded as coming more properly under the heading "Multiple Shop, Multiple Stores"; on the other hand, it is probable that many dressmakers, milliners, etc. employed in drapery establishments omitted to state that fact.

The decline in the number of male drapers was confined to those at ages below 35 years, who numbered 43,974 and 38,631 in 1901 and 1911 respectively; above that age the numbers increased from 23,246 to 27,731; among females there was an increase in every age-group, and the greatest proportional rise was at ages 35–55; the increase among unmarried females of all ages was 19·3 per cent., and was as high as 53·2 per cent. at ages 35–55; among married or widowed females the recorded increase was 60·8 per cent., though, for the reason stated above, the numbers at the two censuses cannot be regarded as strictly comparable, the difference in the method of return probably affecting married women to a greater extent than unmarried.

The numbers returned in 1901 and 1911, together with the rates of increase or decrease for all the headings in Order XIX. (except Wig Makers, Hairdressers), and for Drapers, Linen Drapers, Mercers, are shown in the following table :—

Straw Plait Manufacture, which was formerly a cottage industry, and gave employment in 1861 to no fewer than 27,739 females and 2,128 males, has greatly declined. Most of the straw plait is now imported, and the manufacture in this country is now mainly carried on by machinery. The numbers employed in 1911 had fallen to 162 females and 805 males, most of the latter being enumerated in Luton. The industry has always been located principally in Bedfordshire and Hertfordshire, and the numbers in these two counties in 1901 and 1911, with those for 1861 shown by way of contrast, are as follows :—

	1861.		1901.		1911.
	Males.	Females.	Males.	Females.	Males.	Females.
Bedfordshire	1,214	11,476	454	485	757	65
Hertfordshire	603	8,598	28	681	35	61

Straw Hat, Straw Bonnet—Manufacture differs from the manufacture of Straw Plait in still giving employment to more women than men, and in showing a much less striking decline during the last 50 years in the numbers engaged. In 1861 there were 1,687 males and 16,489 females returned under this heading; by 1901 the number of males had increased to 3,378 and the females had decreased to 9,520, and by 1911 the males had further risen to 4,149 (22·8 per cent. more than the number in 1901) and the females had risen to 9,714 (2·0 per cent. increase). The percentage increase for the two sexes together was 7·5, the greater increase of males being due, as was reported in 1901 also, to the substitution of machines for hand labour in straw hat sewing. This industry is mainly centred in Bedfordshire and Hertfordshire, the numbers at the last two censuses being as follows :—

	1901.		1911.
	Males.	Females.	Males.	Females.
Bedfordshire	2,893	7,730	3,697	8,323
Hertfordshire	321	1,289	294	1,106

There were, in addition to the above numbers, 468 males (including 181 clerks and 141 messengers, etc.) and 574 females (including 501 milliners) returned as employed in connexion with straw hat, straw plait manufacture.

Felt Hat Makers and Makers of Other Hats and Caps (not Straw) increased from 23,989 to 25,390, or by 5·8 per cent.—the males from 12,068 to 12,842, or by 6·4 per cent., and the females from 11,921 to 12,548, or by 5·3 per cent. The numbers engaged in Felt Hat Manufacture were shown separately at both censuses, but the figures for 1901 appear to be relatively understated owing to the larger amount of exclusion of undefined workers who were necessarily classed as makers of " other hats, caps, etc." ; the numbers as given in the table on page ciii. cannot, therefore, be taken as strictly comparable, and it is probable that the males have remained nearly stationary, while the females have certainly decreased. The totals of all Hat and Cap Makers (other than Straw) for the principal centres of felt hat manufacture were as follows :—

	Males.	Females.	Males.	Females.
Lancashire (except Manchester and Salford)	3,179	2,435	3,151	2,286

Warwickshire	863	780	999	705

The manufacture of felt hats, which to some extent superseded the manufacture of silk hats, has in its turn been affected by the increased use of cloth hats and caps ; this branch of manufacture, judged by the total figures for hat manufacture in the districts where most of the cloth hat and cap makers were enumerated, has advanced considerably. The totals of all Hat and Cap Makers (other than Straw) in the cloth hat and cap making districts were as follows :—

	1901.		1911.
	Males.	Females.	Males.	Females.
Manchester and Salford County Boroughs	599	2,457	855	2,955
Leeds County Borough	67	534	58	612
Stepney and Bethnal Green Metropolitan Boroughs	976	819	1,256	1,329
Totals	1,642	3,810	2,169	4,896

The additional workers returned in connexion with this industry numbered 1,035 males and 307 females, of whom 439 males and 162 females were clerks and 280 males were messengers, etc.

Milliners (excluding Dealers in Hats) have increased from 49,231 (of whom 472 were males) to 67,562 (of whom 984 were males), or by 37·2 per cent., notwithstanding the greatly increased number of females classed under the heading "Dealers in Hats." The proportional increases at ages under 25 among female milliners, as in other rapidly increasing occupations, were remarkably high; at age 14 the number rose from 1,723 to 2,616, or by 51·8 per cent; at 15–20 from 17,523 to 25,749, or by 46·9 per cent; and at ages 20–25 from 12,139 to 17,582, or by 44·8 per cent.; at ages above 25 the increase averaged only 19·7 per cent. The unmarried at all ages rose by 39·8 per cent., while the increase for married and widowed was only 4·4 per cent. Comparison of the "status" figures for females at the two censuses indicates considerable change in the organization of this industry, a much larger proportion being employed in places of business; the number of employers showed a large increase in proportion to the total occupied, while there was a large reduction in the proportion of those returned as working on their own account.

Reference has already been made in the paragraphs dealing with Drapers and Straw Hat Manufacturers to the numbers of milliners (4,072 and 501 respectively) returned as employed in those businesses; there were also 398 returned as employed in the businesses classified as "Multiple Shops, Multiple Stores," though, for the reason stated on page ciii., this number should be taken in conjunction with that for drapery establishments. After making these deductions and other quite minor ones, and adding the clerks (148 males and 236 females), the messengers, etc. (644 males), and the various other workers employed in millinery businesses, the net total in these businesses is reduced to 63,951, of whom 1,802 were males.

Dealers in Hats, Bonnets, Caps, etc. (including Straw Hats) were shown by the industry tables as employing 998 commercial travellers, 593 messengers, etc., 489 clerks (of whom 128 were females), and 152 other additional workers, the net total returned as engaged in this business being 12,860 (6,360 males and 6,500 females).

Tailors, including Mantle Makers, numbered 249,467 (122,352 males and 127,115 females), against 237,185 (119,545 males and 117,640 females) in 1901. Thus, the total persons increased by 5·2 per cent., males by only 2·3 per cent. and females by 8·1 per cent.; the returns probably understate the actual increase owing to the less complete separation of dealers from makers at the earlier census. As regards the numbers at the several ages, children of both sexes showed a considerable decline, from 2,493 to 1,443, at ages under 14 years; but at the age-group 15–20 both males and females showed an increase. Among males there was an actual decrease, amounting to nearly five thousand, at ages 20–35, but a large increase—over 7,000—at ages 35–55. Among females the unmarried at all ages increased from 86,762 to 96,886, or by 11·7 per cent., the greatest proportional increases being at ages over 25, while the married or widowed at all ages decreased from 30,878 to 30,229, or by 2·1 per cent. The fact that the females now outnumber the males in this occupation, in spite of a decreased number of married and widowed women employed, and the falling-off in the numbers of both sexes returned as "working on own account" (14,794 in 1911, against 20,844 in 1901), point to the growth of production in factories and workshops at the expense of the trade carried on in the homes of the workers.

Great differences in the proportions of females to males in the tailoring trade are to be found in the different parts of London. The western and north-western boroughs, together with the outlying boroughs of Wandsworth, Greenwich, Lewisham, and Woolwich, comprising a group of 13 boroughs, contained 10,064 males and 7,138 females in 1911, against 10,324 males and 7,175 females in 1901; the City of London and Stepney also showed a preponderance of males at both censuses, the numbers in the latter borough being 14,220 males and 8,908 females, against 12,033 males and 9,311 females; in the remaining 14 boroughs there was a total of 8,862 males and 15,576 females, against 8,787 males and 16,393 females in 1901. The contrasts in the sex-proportions in these different parts of London, which were fairly constant at the two censuses, indicate the different kinds of tailoring carried on by the workers in these localities. Thus, in the first group of boroughs the preponderance of males shows the prevalence of the "bespoke" branch of the trade; in Stepney, large numbers are employed in the Jewish workshops, in which—as stated in the Board of Trade Report, referred to on page cii.—women are in the minority, although employed to a considerable extent; in the last group of boroughs the excess of females is due partly to the numbers of women engaged in mantle making, which is carried on in those districts.

Selecting a few provincial towns in which the figures indicate the presence of clothing factories, the numbers of males and females at the two censuses were as follows :—

County Boroughs.	1901.		1911.		Increase (+) or Decrease (−) per cent.
	Males.	Females.	Males.	Females.	Males.	Females.
Leeds	5,792	14,021	7,625	15,917	+31·6	+13·5
Bristol	1,709	4,863	1,898	5,032	+11·1	+ 3·5
Huddersfield	613	1,271	798	1,615	+30·2	+27·1
Norwich	645	1,635	660	1,292	+ 2·3	−21·0
Walsall	459	1,154	457	1,245	− 0·4	+ 7·9

Plymouth	452	957	433	1,101	− 4·2	+15·0

On the whole, the above figures show that there has been a considerable increase where production on a large scale is carried on, but they show also how widely the rates of increase for the two sexes differ. The number of foreigners in this country who were returned as tailors was larger than that returned under any other occupational heading, and showed an increase since 1901 of 14·0 per cent. for males and 5·2 per cent. for females. The numbers born in the countries that contributed most to the total were as follows :—

Birthplace.	1901.		1911.
	Males.	Females.	Males.	Females.
Russia (including Russian Poland)	15,282	3,794	17,877	4,180

All other foreign countries ...	1,354	281	1,534	313
Total	19,856	4,930	22,640	5,188

In addition to the 122,352 males and 127,115 females classified as "Tailors," there were 6,485 males and 2,367 females following other occupations but employed in tailoring establishments; most of these additional workers were either clerks (2,219 males and 1,302 females) or messengers, porters, etc. (3,875 males and 768 females). On the other hand, 1,536 tailors and 1,955 tailoresses (or mantle makers) were returned as employed in connexion with other industries or services, these numbers including 766 males and 524 females in "Multiple Shops, Multiple Stores"; 149 males and 530 females in the employ of "Drapers"; 164 males and 800 females in the service of the "National Government," and 201 males in "Institution" service.

Clothiers, Outfitters—Dealers numbered 27,045 males and 9,597 females, but inclusion of the additional workers—clerks (1,967 males and 1,124 females), commercial travellers (3,260 males), messengers, porters, etc. (2,177 males and 128 females), and others (135 males and 279 females)—raises the total to 34,584 males and 11,128 females; of this total, however, 500 males and 549 females were classed as additional workers in other industries or services, almost all of them being employed either in "Multiple Shops, Multiple Stores" or in "Drapery" establishments.

The number of Dressmakers was 342,055 in 1911, against 341,599 in 1901. This occupation is almost exclusively followed by females, but it is probably significant of the increasing amount of factory work that the small number of males engaged rose from 1,017 to 2,815, many of whom were either employers or supervisors, while the females actually declined from 340,582 to 339,240.

Further evidence of the production on a large scale in this, as in some other of the clothing trades, is furnished by the increased proportion of unmarried as compared with married or widowed women, the former having risen from 279,161 to 286,767, or by 2·7 per cent., while the latter declined from 61,421 to 52,473, or by 14·6 per cent.; the increased proportion of employers, the decreased proportion returned as working at home, and the large decline in the rural districts (14·9 per cent.) also point in the same direction, and the tendency is commented upon in the Reports of the Chief Inspector of Factories—see, for example, the Report for 1907, page 148, which states that "Occupiers in a small way of business cannot hope to compete with the large houses with their facilities for business, and fall out of the ranks in larger numbers every year." The decline in the number of females employed is not confined to the rural districts, but is found also in those large towns where the industry is not organised on factory lines. The following figures show, on the other hand, the extent of the increase in those localities where the principal development of the industry has occurred :—

	Females.
	1901.	1911.
London Administrative County	61,796	66,087
Middlesex Administrative County	8,889	13,506
Essex Administrative County (with West Ham County Borough)	9,460	13,153
Nottingham County Borough	2,750	5,039
Manchester County Borough	7,050	10,228
Leeds County Borough	3,699	5,361
Remainder of England and Wales	246,938	225,866
Total	340,582	339,240

Of the 339,240 female dressmakers, 7,344 were returned as being employed either in "Multiple Shops" or in "Drapery" establishments. The number of additional workers returned as connected with dressmaking businesses was quite small in proportion to the total number of dressmakers, amounting to only 1,029 males (of whom 575 were messengers, porters, etc., and 327 were clerks), and 1,434 females (of whom 403 were messengers, etc., 649 were clerks, and 260 were domestic servants).

Stay Makers, Corset Makers increased from 13,594 to 14,929, or by 9·8 per cent.; of these numbers, 1,321 and 1,580 respectively were males, who thus show a much larger proportional increase, viz., 19·6 per cent., than the females, whose rate of increase was only 8·8 per cent. The figures for the several counties in which the industry is largely carried on are given below. Except in London and the adjoining districts, where a good deal of the work is made to measure, the figures relate mostly to factory workers, and the variations in the different parts of the country are, therefore, rather striking.

Administrative Counties (with associated County Boroughs).	1901.		1911.

Gloucestershire	170	2,190	183	1,927
Leicestershire	197	1,044	288	1,210
Lancashire	88	981	92	1,103

The industry tabulation added 474 males and 400 females (of whom 197 of the former and 206 of the latter were clerks) to the total under this heading.

Shirt Makers, Seamstresses.—The number classed under this heading includes 5,046 males and 80,338 females; the former showed an increase of 24·9 per cent.

and the latter a decrease of 3·9 per cent., but the female totals are somewhat unreliable for the purpose of comparison. The heading comprises three classes :—

(1) Persons indefinitely returned as Button Holers, Hemmers, Sewing Machinists, Stitchers, Tackers, etc., who, if properly returned, would be classed under some other heading in this Order, or under a heading, such as hosiery or lace manufacture, in Order XVIII.

(2) Needle Women, Plain Workers, etc., either working on their own account or going to their employers' houses to work.

(3) Persons engaged in the manufacture of shirts, collars, ties, underclothing, etc.

The general decline in the number of females is doubtless due in a large degree to the reduction in the second of the above classes, but some part of the apparent decrease must also be ascribed to the smaller number of indefinite returns (class 1) at the later census. The operation of this latter cause may be noticed particularly in the counties of Nottingham, Leicester, and Derby, where the more complete return of the numbers engaged in hosiery or lace manufacture may account for the diminution by 38 per cent. (from 4,181 to 2,596) in the numbers of "shirtmakers, seamstresses." The counties having the largest number under this heading were as follows :—

Administrative Counties (with associated County Boroughs).	1901.		1911.
	Males.	Females.	Males.	Females.
London	1,929	30,648	1,822	24,974
Essex	351	4,114	543	5,185

Lancashire	507	14,180	804	15,998
Yorkshire (West Riding)... ...	80	2,640	197	3,261

All these counties contain a considerable number of workers of class 3 described above ; in the case of Essex it is probable that many of the workers are employed in London, in which county the total females under the heading showed a decline, probably due to a reduction in the number of workers in class 2. The numbers of females in London, together with the adjoining counties of Middlesex and Essex, were 32,066 in 1911, against 36,655 in 1901. In some of the Welsh counties an increase under this heading is associated with a decrease under the heading Dressmaker, and is probably connected with the use, in the schedules filled up in the Welsh Language, of the word "gwniadwraig," which has been taken to be equivalent to seamstress ; many of the women so returned were probably dressmakers, for which occupation there is apparently no distinctive term in Welsh.

Of the 80,338 females classified as shirt makers, seamstresses, 1,020 were returned as being employed either by "Drapers" or in "Multiple Shops," 239 in the service of the National Government, and 538 in other industries. On the other hand, there were 960 males and 1,580 females following various other occupations in connexion with shirt, etc. making businesses ; these additional workers comprised clerks (463 males and 358 females), messengers, porters, etc. (261 males and 178 females), and washers, ironers, etc. (907 females).

Button Makers, who between 1891 and 1901 showed a decrease of 16·9 per cent., increased by no less than 35·3 per cent. between 1901 and 1911, the males being 10·2 per cent. and the females 45·8 per cent. more numerous at the latter date. Most of the persons engaged in this occupation were enumerated in Birmingham and the neighbourhood, the total number in the City as extended in November, 1911, being 3,734 (859 males and 2,875 females) ; the numbers enumerated within this area in 1901 are not available, but the comparative figures for the whole of the three counties in which it is comprised are shown hereunder :—

The number of Glove Makers increased from 10,186 to 11,039, or by 8·4 per cent. ; in the three preceding decennia there had been successive decreases of 33 per cent., 23 per cent., and about 14 per cent.—the last rate cannot be given exactly owing to the exclusion of dealers in 1901 for the first time. Males increased by 21·9 per cent. between 1901 and 1911, but females by only 4·1 per cent. The increase is not generally distributed over all the principal centres, but is confined almost entirely to three counties (Wiltshire, Somersetshire, and Leicestershire) out of the seven in which the bulk of the workers in this industry were enumerated. The figures for these seven counties were as follows :—

Administrative Counties (with associated County Boroughs).	1901.		1911.
	Males.	Females.	Males.	Females.

In Somersetshire there had been a considerable decline between 1891 and 1901, but in Wiltshire and in Leicestershire, the latter being mainly concerned in the manufacture of woollen gloves, the large increase between 1901 and 1911 follows on an increase in the previous intercensal period also.

Boot, Shoe, Slipper, Patten, Clog—Makers and Dealers numbered 247,160 persons (191,285 males and 55,875 females) in 1911, against 251,143 persons (198,304 males and 52,839 females) in 1901 ; the decrease in the total was equal to 1·6 per cent., and in the males to 3·5 per cent., while the females showed an increase of 5·7 per cent. Between 1891 and 1901 there had been an increase of 0·9 per cent. in the total, and of 14·5 per cent. in the females, but a decrease of 2·1 per cent. in the males. This small increase between 1891 and 1901 followed a rise of 11·0 per cent. in 1881–1891, which in turn followed a decline in each of the two preceding intercensal periods. The decline between 1861 and 1881 and the partial recovery in numbers during the ten years ending 1891 were explained in the 1891 census report (page 53) as follows :—"That fall was doubtlessly attributable to the substitution of machinery for hand work in the boot trade, and continued while that change was being effected. The substitution once made, the number of hands employed would naturally again begin to rise with the growth of population." The smallness of the rate of increase (0·9 per cent.), however, in the following ten years made this conclusion questionable ; and as a result of further investigation it was found that the growth in 1881–1891 was not general throughout the country, but took place mainly in the centres for machine-made goods, viz., Northamptonshire, Leicestershire, Norwich, and Leeds. The increase in these districts between 1881 and 1891 was equal to 55·0 per cent., but dropped to 14·5 per cent. in the following ten years ; in the remainder of the country there was a decrease in each period, equal to 2·3 and 5·5 per cent. respectively. In comparing the figures for 1901 with those for 1911 it is possible to exclude dealers and makers of slippers, pattens, and clogs; the numbers actually classed as boot, shoe—makers at the two censuses were as follows :—

*These columns show increase or decrease for Boot, Shoe, Slipper, Patten, Clog—Makers and Dealers, and the figures for Northamptonshire and Leicestershire relate to the Registration Counties.

Other less important boot-making centres are found in East London—Shoreditch, Bethnal Green, Stepney, Poplar, and Hackney Metropolitan Boroughs—where 8,699 male and 3,567 female bootmakers were enumerated; Gloucestershire (7,446 males and 2,061 females), Staffordshire (5,395 males and 1,754 females), Somersetshire (2,436 males and 674 females), and Buckinghamshire (1,743 males and 367 females). None of these but Somersetshire showed increase since 1901, and there the gain was inconsiderable, and was entirely among the females. On the other hand, in Middlesex the numbers rose from 1,980 males and 83 females in 1901 to 2,873 males and 445 females, and in Essex from 3,478 males and 439 females to 3,656 males and 523 females, many of whom were probably employed in London.

Taking the total figures for all the districts quoted above, it appears that the number of males decreased from 99,975 to 92,611, or by 7·4 per cent., while the number of females remained practically stationary—37,723 in 1901, rising only to 37,841 in 1911. The Board of Trade in their Report on Earnings and Hours of Labour in the Clothing Trades, already referred to, give an account of some of the changes in the boot and shoemaking industry during recent years. Thus it is stated (on page xliv. of the Report) that "the small employer and the home worker able to make by hand a complete boot or shoe are still engaged on the best and on the commonest class of work and on repairs, but the bulk of the boots and shoes are now made by operatives in large factories under the system of the sub-division of labour. . . . . The manufacture of boots and shoes in factories in the earlier days of the industry was generally divided into four sections, viz., clicking, rough stuff cutting, closing, and making; each one was a distinct operation with little division of labour. At the present date the work in these four sections has been sub-divided into more than a hundred different processes." The Report then shows that many of these processes which formerly employed hand labour are now done by machine. The Factory Returns also point to a decline in the numbers employed in workshops, and to increased employment in boot and shoe factories. There can thus be little doubt that the actual decline in the numbers employed in boot and shoemaking is the result of greater use of power machinery in substitution for hand labour, and to the speeding up of production owing to greater specialisation. Comparison of the exports and imports of the United Kingdom for the two years 1910 and 1911 with those for 1900 and 1901 certainly points to a greatly increased output. In the two years 1910 and 1911 there were 2,239,238 dozens of pairs of leather boots and shoes exported, and 337,879 dozens imported; the corresponding figures for 1900 and 1901 were 1,308,787 and 531,172.*

Slipper Makers numbered 5,260 (3,279 males and 1,981 females), as compared with 4,348 (2,999 males and 1,349 females) in 1901, the rate of increase among males (9·3 per cent.) thus being much less than that among females (46·8 per cent.). This manufacture is mainly carried on in Lancashire, where it employed 2,262 males and 1,630 females, the corresponding numbers in 1901 being 2,057 and 1,071 respectively. Patten, Clog—Makers declined from 6,328 to 5,924, or by 6·4 per cent.; in Lancashire the number fell from 4,008 to 3,596.

* Statistical Abstract for the United Kingdom (Cd. 6399).

In addition to the 247,160 persons shown in the occupation tables as engaged in boot, shoe, slipper, etc. making and dealing, the industry tabulation shows that 4,613 males and 1,542 females were returned as employed in other capacities in connexion with the manufacture, and 4,353 males and 613 females with the sale of boots shoes, etc. These additional workers comprised clerks (2,512 males and 1,737 females), messengers, porters, etc. (4,160 males), and commercial travellers (1,366 males).

Artificial Flower Makers, who showed a very considerable decline in numbers between 1891 and 1901, rose from 3,138 to 4,591, or by 46·3 per cent., between 1901 and 1911. This industry is carried on almost exclusively in London, in which county, together with Middlesex and Essex, 3,740 out of the total of 3,977 females and 467 out of the total of 614 males were enumerated.

Umbrella, Parasol, Stick—Makers.—The total persons returned under this heading in 1911 was almost identical with that in 1901, but the proportions of the two sexes were materially altered, for while the males increased by 11·4 per cent., the females declined by 12·4 per cent. ; in the previous ten years there had been a change in the opposite direction, but not to so great an extent, the males having declined by 8·2 per cent., while the females rose by 2·4 per cent. Altogether in the twenty years, 1891–1911, the males rose from 5,377 to 5,500, and the females fell from 4,500 to 4,038. The distribution of the males and females in 1901 and 1911 among the counties in which the largest numbers were enumerated was as follows :—

Dyeing and Cleaning.—Persons employed in garment dyeing and cleaning businesses are, as already stated, classified in the occupation tables with textile dyers, bleachers, printers, etc. in Order XVIII. This industry employed altogether 3,722 males and 5,308 females, of whom 2,407 males and 3,041 females were actually engaged in dyeing and cleaning processes. Of the remainder, 1,581 females and 128 males were classified as " Receiving Shop, Receiving Office—Keepers, Assistants " ; 393 females and 155 males were clerks, 488 males were messengers, porters, etc., and 225 males were carmen, motor van, etc. drivers.

XX. Food, Tobacco, Drink, and Lodging.—The number of persons comprised in this Order as engaged in the preparation and sale of food, tobacco, and drink, and in providing board and lodging, was 1,388,248 (913,565 males and 474,683 females) in 1911, against 1,073,809 (774,291 males and 299,518 females) in 1901, the rate of increase thus being 29·3 per cent. for persons, 18·0 per cent. for males and 58·5 per cent. for females. The totals are, however, not strictly comparable owing to—

(1) Difference in the method of returning female relatives assisting the head of the family in business (to which reference has already been made) ;

(2) The more complete return of lodging and boarding house keepers in 1911 ; and

(3) Changes in the classification of waiters and others in Inns and Hotels, which resulted in their more complete separation from Order IV. (Domestic Service).

In the first sub-order, relating to Workers and Dealers in Food, the numbers enumerated under the various headings in 1901 and 1911 were as follows :—

* The rates of increase for females under the several headings relating to "Dealers" are not given, because the numbers at the two censuses are not properly comparable.

The total of the sub-order, which was 701,606 persons in 1901, amounted to 887,399 in 1911, the males increasing from 553,873 to 654,185 and the females from 147,733 to 233,214. The increase in the males was 18·1 per cent., which is slightly lower than the rate of increase (18·5 per cent.) in the preceding intercensal period, but among females the rate of increase has risen from 23·9 per cent. in 1891–1901 to 57·9 per cent. in 1901–1911, the unmarried females having increased in the latter period by 52·9 per cent. and the married or widowed by 64·9 per cent. The rate of increase among the married or widowed, however, is exaggerated, especially under some of the headings relating to dealers, owing to the greatly extended return of wives or other relatives assisting in the business ; a striking example is furnished by the numbers under the heading "Butchers, Meat Salesmen," which showed an increase from 1,507 to 3,176 for unmarried females and from 2,343 to 8,705 for married or widowed—no fewer than 7,307 of the latter being returned as married. The numbers under the headings for "Workers" are probably affected only to a slight extent by this difference in the method of return, and the rates of increase are therefore given in the table for all these headings except "Bread, Biscuit, Cake, etc.—Makers," from which it is difficult to eliminate the dealers.

The only heading in this sub-order which shows actual decrease is that for "Slaughterers," but the numbers are small, and no great degree of accuracy can be claimed for them in view of possible interchange between this heading and that for "Butchers, Meat Salesmen." An instance of a real decline in the number of Slaughterers, however, is found in Cheshire, where the number fell from 517 to 187, and was due to the falling-off in the number of live cattle sent from the United States to Birkenhead and to the embargo on Argentine cattle.

Creamery Workers have risen from 932 to 1,825, but it is probable that the numbers at both censuses were understated ; the only counties with upwards of 100 persons classified under this heading were—Wiltshire (214 males and 221 females), Somersetshire (204 males and 29 females), Cheshire (112 males and 89 females), Buckinghamshire (115 males and 71 females), Dorsetshire (117 males and 10 females), Staffordshire (88 males and 41 females), and Derbyshire (80 males and 28 females), and in every case the numbers were considerably in excess of those returned in 1901.

The heading "Millers, Cereal Food Manufacture" shows only a low rate of increase for males, but a high rate for females, whose numbers rose from 775 to 1,742. In Lincolnshire the number of females so employed increased from 207 to 649, a large number of them being engaged in pea-splitting, etc.; it is possible that here, as in other parts of the country, the increased employment of females in this industry does not imply substitution of female for male labour, so much as an increased demand for the former, especially in connexion with packing work, owing to the extended use of packet goods. The smallness of the increase among the males under this heading was probably due to decrease in corn milling, the number of males in the aggregate of the rural districts having declined from 9,865 to 8,724. In Glamorganshire, however, the number of males rose from 547 to 1,002. The total number of persons connected with corn milling and cereal food manufacture is shown in the industry tables as 36,856, of whom only 25,481 were classified to the occupation; the 11,375 additional workers included 4,868 carmen, 2,717 clerks (2,463 males and 254 females), and 1,097 drivers, stokers, firemen of stationary engines.

Fish Curers increased from 2,863 to 4,502, the largest numbers being returned in Yorkshire (East Riding) and Lincolnshire; in the former county the numbers rose from 595 (353 males and 242 females) to 1,209 (587 males and 622 females), and in the latter from 483 (404 males and 79 females) to 998 (761 males and 237 females).

Jam, Preserve, Sweet—Makers rose from 22,131 to 29,390, the males showing an increase of 49·7 per cent., compared with 26·2 per cent. for the females. The largest numbers in proportion to population were enumerated in the following counties:—

In connexion with Jam, Preserve, Sweet—Manufacture there were returned clerks to the number of 1,135 males and 582 females, carmen (835 males), messengers, etc. (300 males), cardboard box makers (267 females), and other additional workers (1,380 males and 279 females), making the total shown as connected with the industry 12,982 males and 21,186 females.

Chocolate and Cocoa Makers more than doubled in number between 1901 and 1911, having risen from 7,601 to 17,876. Most of these workers were enumerated in the four counties of London, Gloucestershire, Worcestershire, and Yorkshire, (East Riding), which together contained more than three-quarters of the total, and in each case showed a large increase over the numbers in 1901; large proportional increases were also shown by the smaller numbers enumerated in Surrey, Hertfordshire, Bedfordshire, Essex, Norfolk, Warwickshire, Cheshire, Lancashire, and Yorkshire (West Riding). The additional workers returned as connected with this industry numbered 3,277 males and 1,538 females, and included clerks (1,130 males and 412 females), cardboard box makers (869 females), and 527 males engaged in general engineering and machine making or in other metal trades.

Ginger Beer, Mineral Water—Manufacture, which between 1891 and 1901 showed an increase of 69·9 per cent., rose by only 1·4 per cent. between 1901 and 1911, the males actually declining by 4·3 per cent.; the decrease in the number of males employed and the increase in the number of females was observed in most of the larger counties. This industry was shown as giving employment to 7,092 males and 219 females in addition to the 8,802 males and 2,726 females classified to the heading in the occupation tables. More than half the additional workers were carmen and van guards, who numbered 3,780 and 367 respectively.

Under the heading "Mustard, Vinegar, Spice, Pickle, etc.—Makers" are grouped the workers in several miscellaneous articles of food. The numbers occupied rose from 4,190 in 1901 to 7,181 in 1911. In London and the adjoining counties the total increased from 1,589 to 3,216, in Norfolk from 514 to 619, in Warwickshire from 188 to 632, and in Lancashire from 525 to 739, while in Yorkshire (West Riding) there was a decrease from 567 to 481.

The females under the heading "Bread, Biscuit, Cake, etc.—Makers" have increased from 4,974 to 9,887. A good deal of this increase is accounted for by the greater employment of women in biscuit making, districts in which this industry is important showing a high rate of increase for females, who have apparently to some extent displaced the males. The males included under this heading showed an increase of only 9·7 per cent., while under the heading for "dealers" in these articles of food the numbers rose by 43·7 per cent. It is probable, however, that the latter have been more completely separated from "makers" than in 1901, and this would cause a greater disparity between the rates of increase on the recorded numbers than actually exists.

The various headings under which the "Dealers" in Food are classified nearly all show increase in the number of males in excess of that among the general population (10·9 per cent.), the only exception being "Grocers," with an increase of 9·8 per cent. The numbers occupied at the several ages, however, show some very different rates of increase, as will be seen from the following table, which shows the principal occupations under these headings; in common with most other industries there has been a considerable falling-off in the numbers employed under 15; at 15–20 the increase is much greater than at 20–25 for butchers and grocers, and, to a less extent, for greengrocers, while it is much smaller among milksellers.

The large excess of males at age 15–20 over those at age 20–25 employed by grocers, 33,217, against 25,610 in 1911, is noteworthy as indicating a certain amount of "blind-alley" employment; the only other of the five headings in the table affording similar indication is that for butchers, under which the number at 15–20 was 23,885, against 20,042 at 20–25.

In all these trades, however, large numbers of errand boys are employed, and, being classified according to their occupation as messengers, are not included in the foregoing table. These boys, with the clerks and carmen, constitute the majority of the additional workers shown by the industry tabulation to be connected with the businesses referred to, and their numbers in relation to the total numbers employed are shown in the following statement, which includes also figures for the three other of the more important food dealing businesses, viz., provision dealers, corn merchants, and fishmongers :—

Tobacco.—The manufacture of tobacco, including cigars and cigarettes, shows a decline of 1·1 per cent. in the number of persons employed, the males having increased from 7,524 to 7,886, or by 4·8 per cent., while the females decreased from 19,972 to 19,312, or by 3·3 per cent. The following statement gives the counties in which more than 500 persons were employed in this industry either in 1901 or 1911, and shows the considerable change during that period in its local distribution :—

Although there was this slight decline in the numbers employed, the Statistical Abstract of the Board of Trade shows that the quantity of unmanufactured tobacco imported into the United Kingdom, less the re-exports, was 28·4 per cent. more in the five years ending 1911 than in the five years ending 1901 ; the figures were as follows :—

	lbs.	lbs.
Imported	462,404,794	574,792,879
Re-exported	31,212,940	20,946,431
Net Import ...	431,191,854	553,846,448

Tobacco Dealers and Tobacconists showed a considerable increase, the males having risen from 10,200 to 11,702 (14·7 per cent.) and the females from 6,670 to 9,596 (43·9 per cent.) ; among the latter the unmarried rose from 3,679 to 5,291 and the married or widowed from 2,991 to 4,305.

Connected with the manufacture of tobacco the industry tables show a net total of 10,569 males and 20,444 females, inclusive of the 7,886 males and 19,312 females classified to this heading in the occupation tables. The additional workers included clerks (1,413 males and 303 females), cardboard box makers (702 females), messengers, etc. (200 males), and tinplate goods makers (155 males). Connected with the sale of tobacco there were, in addition to the 11,702 males and 9,596 females classified to this heading in the occupation tables, 1,403 commercial travellers and 600 male and 246 female clerks ; the net total returned as engaged in connexion with this business being 14,275 males and 9,879 females.

The Makers of Spirituous Drinks, as classified in the third sub-order of Order XX., numbered 38,170, or 68 less than in 1901, and under each of the three headings there was but little difference in the numbers at the two censuses, as will be seen from the following comparative statement :—

	1901.			1911.
	Persons.	Males.	Females.	Persons.	Males.	Females.
Maltsters	9,607	9,595	12	9,361	9,357	4
Brewers	27,919	27,822	97	27,905	27,862	43
Distillers, Spirit Manufacturers	712	706	6	904	895	9

Maltsters showed a decline of 2·6 per cent., against an increase of 5·7 per cent. in the previous intercensal period. The number of males engaged in brewing showed practically no variation in 1911 from the number in 1901 ; between 1891 and 1901

there had been an increase of 7·3 per cent. In Staffordshire, which is the only county where the industry is of outstanding importance, the number fell from 4,928 to 4,428. The Statistical Abstract (Cd. 6399) shows that the quantity of beer made in the United Kingdom declined by 6·9 per cent. from 181,710,192 barrels in the five years ending 1901 to 169,245,328 barrels in the five years ending 1911. In addition to the 27,905 persons shown above under the heading "Brewers," no fewer than 47,443 other persons were returned as being employed in connexion with the brewing industry. The principal occupations followed by the male additional workers in this industry are summarised below :—

The female additional workers included 161 clerks and 1,578 beer bottlers.

The numbers under the heading "Distillers, Spirit Manufacture" were very small; more than two-thirds of them were enumerated in London and Lancashire, where they increased from 310 to 497 and from 130 to 173 respectively.

The numbers enumerated under the various headings of the fourth sub-order as providing board and lodging and as dealing in spirituous drinks were as follows :—

Dealing in Spirituous Drinks.—Taking the first group of headings to represent occupations connected with the sale of spirituous drinks (though many of the workers in the next two headings also should be added), the males increased from 127,309 to 132,302, or by 3·9 per cent.—the rate of increase among the Inn, Hotel—Keepers, Publicans, and Wine Merchants being 4·8 per cent., against 2·2 per cent. among Barmen, Cellarmen, etc. In the case of the females it is impossible to estimate to what extent the figures under the several headings have been affected by the more extended return of relatives assisting in business; these have been classed under the heading "Inn, Hotel—Keeper, etc.," and the great increase in the number of females as compared with males under that heading is doubtless due to this cause. It is probable, however, that some female relatives of Inn and Hotel Keepers who were classified in 1901 as Barmaids or Bar Assistants were in 1911, on account of the difference in the method of return, classified as "Inn, Hotel—Keepers, etc."

As regards "Waiters (not Domestic)" and "Others in Inn, Hotel, Eating House—Service," it is not possible to make any satisfactory comparison of the numbers at the two censuses, for the following reason :—All Waiters in Inns, Hotels, Beershops, Restaurants, Coffee Houses, Eating Houses, and Clubs, and also Waiters in Colleges, Lodging Houses, Boarding Houses, Temperance Hotels, and Hotel Lodging Houses, if non-resident, have been classed under the heading "Waiter (not Domestic)" in 1911, and other persons returned as working at (but not residing in) all kinds of Hotels, Lodging and Eating Houses were, as a rule, classed under the heading "Others in Inn, Hotel, etc. Service," but in 1901 the separation of such workers from the various headings in Order IV. (Domestic Service) was nothing like so complete. How much of the increase under these two headings is due to the more rigid classification in 1911 cannot be ascertained, but there is no doubt that this cause is not by itself sufficient to account for the whole of the very large increase shown by the recorded numbers, viz., 18,849 males and 21,106 females in 1901, as against 44,261 males and 38,994 females in 1911. Out of the total of 23,054 males who, at the latter census, were classed as "Waiters (not Domestic)," 7,888 were of foreign nationality, this number including 3,263 from Germany, 1,591 from Italy, 1,406 from Austria, 628 from Switzerland, and 446 from France.

The industry tabulation distinguishes the numbers of "Waiters" and of "Others in Inn, Hotel, Eating House, etc. Service" who were in the employ of Hotel Keepers and Publicans from those who were employed in Eating House, Lodging House, and Boarding House Service. With the former, and with the further addition of persons in all other occupations employed in Inn, Hotel—Service and in Dealing in Spirituous Drinks, the total number in this service is raised to 185,187 males and 112,886 females. The following summary shows the more important occupations connected with the trade :—

Coffee House, Eating House—Keepers increased from 19,113 to 32,651, or by 70·8 per cent.—the males from 11,870 to 15,970, or by 34·5 per cent., and the females from 7,243 to 16,681, or by 130·3 per cent., the rate of increase for unmarried females being 121 per cent., against 135 per cent. for the married or widowed. Part of the increase under this heading is, no doubt, due to the inclusion of a greater proportion than in 1901 of the female relatives, but it is highly probable that much of the increase is real, and may be accounted for by the extension of catering for light refreshments, the managers or manageresses of such businesses being classed to this heading. The following figures show the remarkable growth under this heading in those counties containing the largest numbers of Coffee House, Eating House—Keepers :—

Administrative Counties (with associated County Boroughs).	1901.			1911.			Increase per cent.

Yorkshire (West Riding) ...	1,755	1,161	594	3,416	1,806	1,610	55·6	171·0

The Waiters returned as employed in Coffee and Eating Houses numbered 5,530, and the Waitresses, 17,890 ; there were also in these establishments 2,290 domestic indoor servants, 6,671 males and 7,393 females classified under the heading " Others in Inn, Hotel, Eating House, etc. Service," and 3,233 male and 3,250 female cooks (not domestic), as well as 1,014 male and 1,329 female clerks.

Lodging House, Boarding House—Keepers.—The number of persons so classed was 83,816 (9,145 males and 74,671 females). In 1901 the numbers classified under this heading were 6,543 males and 43,527 females. The actual increase is, however, less than is indicated by these figures, for in 1911 persons for whom no occupation was returned, but who were apparently dependent upon income received from boarders, were classed as boarding house keepers, the rule being as follows :—

> " In Schedules where the occupation of ' Boarding House Keeper ' is not given, and the number of boarders exceeds the number of persons in the family, excluding servants, the establishment is to be taken as a Boarding House as regards the Servants. The code for ' Boarding House Keeper ' is, however, only to be added when no statement is made in Column 10 (Personal Occupation) for the person in charge and the number of boarders exceeds three. These rules do not apply to houses in which business assistants are boarded by the firm."

The largest numbers of Lodging House and Boarding House Keepers in proportion to population are naturally found in those counties which contain popular seaside and other holiday resorts, and it is among such counties that some of the greatest rates of increase have been recorded, though, for the reason given above, the recorded are in excess of the real rates.

The total number of persons shown by the industry tables as connected with Lodging House, Boarding House—Keeping was 119,960 (15,002 males and 104,958 females), the additional workers consisting almost entirely of domestic indoor servants.

XXI. Gas, Water, and Electricity Supply, and Sanitary Service.—The total number of workers classified to this Order was 102,355 (of whom only 116 were females), against 71,425 (of whom 141 were females) in 1901 ; the increase was, therefore, equal to 43·3 per cent. The numbers of males under each heading comprised in the Order in 1901 and 1911 were as follows :—

	1901.	1911.	Increase per cent.
Gas Works Service	47,028	54,526	15·9
Waterworks Service	5,701	8,565	50·2
Electricity Supply	2,888	14,854	414·3
Drainage and Sanitary Service	7,189	9,810	36·5
Scavenging and Disposal of Refuse ...	8,478	14,484	70·8

In classifying the occupations an attempt was made to distinguish gas " makers " from " others " in gas works service ; and in electricity supply service to distinguish those engaged in " generation and distribution " (i.e., distribution from works and stations) from " others." The figures obtained under the respective divisions are unsatisfactory on account of the large number returned indefinitely, and, therefore, necessarily included with the " others."

The number of males classified under the heading " Gas Works Service " was 4,714, 8,746, and 13,561 respectively at the censuses of 1851, 1861, and 1871 (when clerks employed in gas works were included in the numbers) ; in 1881 and succeeding censuses (when clerks were excluded from the heading) the numbers were 18,535, 30,729, 47,028, and 54,526 respectively. Thus the rate of increase, which had been as high as 65·8 per cent. in 1881–1891, and 53·0 per cent. in 1891–1901, fell to 15·9 per cent. in 1901–1911. During the last intercensal period there were only two counties—Gloucestershire and Durham—in which there was an actual decline in the number of gas workers, but in most of the largest counties, including London, Lancashire, Yorkshire (West Riding), Warwickshire, as well as in Essex—where the proportion of gas workers to total population was much greater than in any other county—the proportional increases were below the average for the whole country ; in Middlesex and in Surrey, on the other hand, as well as in five smaller English counties, the increases exceeded 50 per cent.

By the addition of gas works employees who were classified under other occupational headings, the total number of males employed in gas works service in 1911 is raised from 54,526 to 79,032, of whom 18,237 and 23,436 respectively were in Local Authorities' gas works. Of the 24,506 workers added by the industry tabulation, 7,569 were gasfitters ; 1,959 engine drivers, stokers, firemen (not railway) ; 994 blacksmiths ; 787 erectors, fitters, turners and their labourers ; 966 bricklayers and their labourers ; 817 plumbers ; 380 weighing and measuring apparatus (gas meter) makers 4,983 commercial clerks ; 1,337 municipal officers (clerks, etc. in Local Authorities' gas works), and 939 carmen, motor van, etc. drivers.

The heading Waterworks Service, which showed an increase of 49·3 per cent. between 1891 and 1901, further rose by 50·2 per cent. between 1901 and 1911. Of the total increase of 2,864 in the latter period, London and the adjoining counties accounted for 1,021, and Lancashire and Cheshire together for a further 744 ; in some of the other counties, although the actual numbers were small, the proportional increases were large.

The industry tables show that 6,296 males were employed in connexion with waterworks service, in addition to the 8,565 classified under that heading. These additional workers included 2,047 drivers, stokers, firemen of stationary engines ; 1,115 municipal, etc. officers (clerks, etc. in Local Authorities' waterworks) ; 531 commercial clerks ; 762 navvies ; and 359 plumbers. Altogether the employees in Local Authorities, waterworks numbered 11,162 males, and in other waterworks service, 3,699 males.

Electricity Supply.—While there can be no doubt that the number of persons engaged in the supply of electric light and power has increased very largely between 1901 and 1911, it will be evident from the remarks in the paragraph relating to "Electrical Apparatus" (page lxxiii.) that the recorded numbers do not furnish a true comparison. The 14,854 males classified under this heading in 1911 included 2,809 in London, 1,601 in Middlesex and Essex, 1,874 in Lancashire, 1,096 in Yorkshire (West Riding), 527 in Durham, 526 in Staffordshire, and 494 in Northumberland.

Rather more than half the total engaged in the supply of electricity were employed by Local Authorities. Including the workers following other occupations in connexion with this service, there was a total of 17,569 males, of whom 8,931 were in the employ of Local Authorities and 8,638 under other employers, these numbers including respectively 164 returned as connected with the supply of electricity for tramways and 448 for railways.

Sanitary Service (i.e., drainage and scavenging service).—The number of males returned under these headings, which do not include sanitary inspectors and other officials who are classed to "Local Government" (Order I.), rose from 15,667 in 1901 to 24,294 in 1911, the increase being equal to 55·1 per cent. In London, together with Middlesex and Essex, there were 6,862 ; in Lancashire, 4,936 ; and in Yorkshire West Riding, 2,859. The majority of the workers were naturally in the service of Local Authorities, 23,229 being so returned, or, if the additional workers be included, 26,815 out of a total of 28,293. The additional workers in this branch of Local Authorities' service included 1,485 carmen, motor van, etc. drivers ; 827 agricultural labourers and others connected with agriculture, and 539 engine drivers, stokers, firemen (not railway).

XXII. Other, General, and Undefined Workers and Dealers.—This Order includes some miscellaneous occupations which do not come appropriately under any one of the foregoing Orders, as well as some which have been regarded as "General" or "Undefined," because, from want of precision in the returns, they could not be definitely assigned to their proper headings.

The first sub-order, "Advertising," is now shown for the first time ; three of the four headings comprised in it were formerly included in Order XVII. (Paper Prints, Books, and Stationery), but were not separately distinguished in that Order. These headings relate to Circular, Envelope—Addressers (123 males and 144 females), Advertising, Bill Posting—Agents (3,404 males and 123 females), and Bill Posters (3,273 males). The fourth heading related to Sandwichmen, Bill Distributors, who in 1901 were included in the miscellaneous group, "Sundry Workers in other Industries" ; the tables show only 1,174 persons under this heading, but probably many who should have been included returned themselves under some other occupational designation. The whole sub-order is mainly confined to workers in advertising businesses, and does not include to any extent persons employed by newspaper publishers or by the firms manufacturing or dealing in the articles advertised. In addition to the 7,972 males and 269 females classified under the four headings, there were 1,373 male and 494 commercial clerks returned as connected with advertising, the total numbers in the industry, inclusive of all additional workers, being 9,924 males and 795 females.

In the second sub-order, "About Animals," are included the "Cattle, Sheep, Pig —Dealers, Salesmen," who, together with "Drivers, Lairmen," declined from 8,199 in 1901 to 7,848 in 1911.

The third sub-order, "Sundry Specified Industries," included the following headings, which were shown also in 1901: —

Rag—Gatherers, Dealers	4,403	2,572	1,831	9,431	4,373	5,058

Tobacco Pipe, etc. Makers, who had declined by 7·1 per cent. between 1891 and 1901, rose by 15·2 per cent. in the succeeding ten years; of the total of 1,630 males and 693 females in 1911, London and the adjoining counties of Essex and Middlesex contained 1,059 males and 340 females, as compared with 600 males and 181 females in these counties in 1901, and Lancashire, 218 males and 146 females, against 290 males and 150 females in 1901. Bone, Horn, Ivory, Tortoiseshell—Workers decreased by 28·6 per cent., following a decline of 18·2 per cent. between 1891 and 1901. More than four-fifths of these workers were enumerated in Yorkshire (West Riding), London, together with Essex and Middlesex, or Warwickshire. In the first-named county the numbers showed but little variation as between 1901 and 1911, but in the other two cases they declined from 653 to 425 and from 423 to 174, respectively. Floor Cloth Manufacture, for which the rate of increase was as high as 77·7 per cent., is mainly carried on in Lancashire and in the metropolitan counties, the numbers of males enumerated in these areas at the two censuses being :—

	1901.	1911.
London, Middlesex, Surrey, Essex ...	1,508	1,813

The total number of persons employed in floor cloth manufacture was shown by the industry tabulation as 7,968, the "additional workers" numbering 1,763. No comparison can be made between the figures at the two censuses for Japanners, the numbers in 1911 relating only to those employed in japanning works and those who omitted to state the manufacture with which they were connected. The number of Chimney Sweeps (excluding the few females under this heading), which had decreased by 12·2 per cent. between 1891 and 1901, rose again by 13·1 per cent. between 1901 and 1911. In 1901 it was observed that there was a disinclination among young persons to enter this occupation; though less marked in the figures for 1911, this tendency is still shown. Between 1891 and 1901 the numbers at ages under 25 had fallen from 1,547 to 924, concurrently with the general decrease, but between 1901 and 1911, notwithstanding the general increase, the number at these ages further fell to 862. Rag—Gatherers, Dealers numbered 9,431 (4,373 males and 5,058 females). The figures show a large increase, which was general thoughout the country, but they are not comparable as a whole owing to the figures in Yorkshire (West Riding)—where 1,230 males and 2,778 females were returned in 1911—being seriously affected by the change in the method of return, which permitted a more complete separation of rag sorters and pickers in the employ of rag merchants from those in the employ of wool and worsted manufacturers. It is only in the former case that the worker is classified to this heading.

"Celluloid—Makers, Workers," who had not previously been distinguished in the tables, numbered 2,017, of whom 1,008 were males and 1,009 were females. This industry was carried on mainly in Essex and Suffolk.

Another new heading in this sub-order is that for " Receiving Shop, Receiving Office—Keepers, Assistants (Laundry; Dyers and Cleaners) "; these have already been referred to under those headings in Orders IV. and XIX. respectively (see pages xxxi. and cxi.), where it is shown that 157 males and 1,660 females were returned as in receiving offices in connexion with laundries, and 128 males and 1,581 females in receiving offices for dyeing and cleaning businesses.

The sub-order " Makers and Dealers (General or Undefined) " included the following six headings—those for " Multiple Shop, Multiple Store—Proprietors, Workers (general or undefined)," and " News—Boys, Vendors (street or undefined)," which have been introduced at this census, having been formerly classified to " General Shopkeepers " and " Costermongers, Street Sellers " respectively. Comparative figures were as follows :—

	1901.			1911.
	Persons.	Males.	Females.	Persons.	Males	Females.
Multiple Shop, Multiple Store—Proprietors, Workers (general or undefined)	51,576	23,539	28,037	4,035	3,122	913
General or Unclassified Shopkeepers, General Dealers				86,042	38,697	47,345
Pawnbrokers	12,530	10,769	1,761	15,128	12,611	2,517
Costermongers, Hawkers, Street Sellers ...	61,339	46,941	14,398	69,347	53,971	15,376
News—Boys, Vendors (street or undefined)				16,441	16,174	267
Contractors, Manufacturers, Managers, Superintendents, Foremen (undefined)	7,240	6,646	594	3,492	3,208	284

General Shopkeepers and their assistants, including shopkeepers and shop assistants not otherwise described, and a few in businesses not classified in any of the preceding Orders, appear to have increased considerably since 1901. Among the females some part of the increase is doubtless due to the more complete returns of relatives assisting in business (see page xxxvi.), and among males the more precise classification at this census may have affected the comparability of the figures. The growth of " multiple shops or stores," i.e., businesses embracing several departments of retail trade, made it advisable to attempt to separate them in the tables from ordinary general shops. The number of persons shown under this heading in the table above does not include the large number of workers in multiple shops who were classified according to the personal occupation in which they were engaged. The industry tables show that the total number of persons returned as employed in multiple shops was 44,570, of whom 34,681 were males and 9,889 were females, and the principal occupations returned in connexion with these businesses comprised workers and dealers in food (11,538 males and 729 females) and in dress (3,706 males and 3,133 females), in addition to clerks (5,223 males and 2,781 females), carmen (3,591 males), and messengers, porters, etc. (1,825 males). The overlapping between multiple shops and businesses, e.g., " drapers " (as referred to on page ciii.), and the fact that many persons employed in multiple shops were returned only according to the department in which they were working make it probable that these numbers are considerably understated.

Pawnbrokers and their assistants (exclusive of the small number of " additional workers " employed in this industry) appear to have increased from 12,530 to 15,128, or by 20·7 per cent., against 9·3 per cent. in the previous intercensal period. The distinction between persons classed as pawnbrokers and those classed as dealers in precious metals, etc., cannot always be made with certainty, but as there was also a very large increase under the latter heading between 1901 and 1911 (see page lxxvii.), it would not be safe to assume that transfers from it accounted for the rise in the recorded number engaged in pawnbroking. The number of pawnbrokers' licences issued during the year ending 31st March, 1911, was 4,559, against 4,280 in the year ending March, 1901, this increase of 6·5 per cent. being almost identical with that in 1901 as compared with 1891.

The number of " Costermongers, Hawkers, Street Sellers," including for comparison newsboys, etc., who were not shown separately in 1901, increased from 61,339 in 1901 to 85,788, or by nearly 40 per cent., the increase of males being 49·4 per cent. and that of females 8·6 per cent. Some part of the excess of the male over the female rate of increase apparently occurred among newspaper sellers. In 1901 only 3,219 males under 15 and a further 5,238 between 15 and 20 were classified as "costermongers, hawkers, street sellers"; but in 1911 this heading together with "News—Boys, Vendors" contained 10,766 under 15 and a further 7,526 between 15 and 20, the newspaper sellers at these ages numbering 10,174 and 3,075 respectively. At ages above 20, which include few newspaper sellers, the comparative figures were 38,484 in 1901, against 51,853 in 1911, showing an increase of 34·7 per cent. The increase was considerable at all age-periods, except 75 and upwards, but was much greater under 15 years than at any subsequent age. This enormous increase from 3,219 to 10,766 in the number of boys returned under these headings does doubtless represent a real increase in the number of newspaper sellers—which occupation is quite exceptional in this respect—but it is also probable that the returns for 1911 were more complete than were those of 1901. The 10,174 boys under 15 years classified as newsboys (street or undefined) included some who should have been returned as employed in newsagents' businesses, in addition to the 1,984 who were so returned.

The figures under the indefinite heading "Contractors, Manufacturers, Managers, Superintendents, Foremen (undefined)" are useful only as giving some indication of the greater precision of the returns at the recent census, and the same may be said of the indefinite headings in the next sub-order which relates to "Mechanics and Labourers (General or Undefined)." In this sub-order Artizans, Mechanics, Apprentices (undefined) declined from 18,229 to 11,345; Factory Hands, Labourers (undefined) from 32,812 to 12,965; and Machinists, Machine Workers (undefined) from 5,867 to 1,536.

The heading "General Labourers" comprises labourers who, partly owing to insufficient description in the returns, were not classified to the trade, manufacture, or service with which they were connected. The reduction in the numbers from 490,773 in 1901 to 295,343 in 1911 simply denotes, therefore, improvement in the returns, and does not imply any change in the number of labourers whose work was not of a specialised character, and who were, therefore, properly described by the term "General Labourer." In the census classification labourers are, with few exceptions, assigned to the same headings as the other workers in the respective manufactures or trades. The industry tables show 55,971 General Labourers working in connexion with specified industries or services, but this number relates only to those who were not classified directly to the industry or to the particular branch of work in the service with which they were connected, and includes 8,214 in the service of the National Government, 35,009 in Local Government service (including Police and Poor Law Services), 1,978 in Shipping and Navigation service, 6,192 in Harbour, Dock, etc. service, and 3,306 in the employ of Contractors and Manufacturers (undefined).

The number of "Engine—Drivers, Stokers, Firemen (not Railway, Marine, or Agricultural)" was 110,761, against 106,320 in 1901, and it is gratifying to be able to record the fact that the new question on the schedule as to the industry or service with which connected was so well answered by these men that 97,569, or 88 per cent., of them were classified accordingly in the industry tables. They are distributed over practically all the industries or services, as will be seen from Table 28, those employing the largest numbers being given in the following list :—

Industry or Service.	Number of Engine—Drivers, Stokers, Firemen.	Industry or Service.	Number of Engine—Drivers, Stokers, Firemen.

* These numbers are exclusive of engine drivers, etc. employed in those branches of National or Local Government which are classified separately in the industry tables.

XXIII. Persons without specified occupations or unoccupied.—This Order comprises all persons aged 10 years and upwards who are not classified in any of the foregoing twenty-two orders. It includes (1) persons who have retired from business or the professions (other than officers of the army or navy), (2) pensioners, (3) old age pensioners whose occupation or former occupation was not stated, (4) persons neither following nor having followed an occupation or profession, but deriving their income from private sources or allowances, (5) students, (6) children (over 10 years) attending school, and (7) the remainder of the population, consisting principally of wives wholly engaged in domestic duties at home. It was intended to classify the unoccupied under six headings, but it was found necessary to introduce a separate heading for (3), and to amalgamate the numbers recorded under (5), (6), and (7) on account of the incompleteness of the returns.

The numbers tabulated under these several headings, together with the corresponding numbers at the two preceding censuses, are given below, but in making comparisons due regard must be paid to the qualifying remarks following the table.

The " retired " include at each census not only those who had discontinued their industrial, commercial, or professional activity either on account of having accumulated the means of independence or of having reached an advanced age, but also those who by reason of physical or mental infirmity were assumed to have relinquished work permanently. Thus, all inmates of lunatic asylums, all insane inmates of workhouses, as well as all other inmates over 60 years of age whose former occupation was stated, are classed under this heading. The only change in classification in 1911 is the inclusion of retired clergymen of the established church and retired medical practitioners, who numbered 941 and 1,579 respectively, but this accounted for only 2,520 out of the apparent increase. The major part of the increase under this heading is due to the provision of Old Age Pensions, which have brought a large number of old people into the ranks of the retired. The age-distribution and former occupations of retired persons and of pensioners are dealt with below.

The heading " Pensioner " is restricted as far as the returns permit to unoccupied persons returned as living on or in receipt of pensions paid in respect of specific services rendered, including men of the army, navy, and marines. There is no doubt, however, that most of the large increase in the numbers shown under the heading is due to the fact that many old age pensioners were returned simply as pensioners, with the addition of their former occupation, and could not, therefore, be distinguished from persons properly coming under this heading; this is evident from the great increase at the age-groups 65–75, and 75 and upwards. The number of old age pensioners shown separately does not represent anything like the total number in receipt of such pensions, but only those who so described themselves and failed to return their present or former occupations, together with the small number of males and the considerable number of females who had never followed an occupation. The total number of old age pensions payable on the 31st March, 1911, is shown in the Annual Report of the Commissioners of Customs and Excise as 613,873. Persons who were stated to be following an occupation at the time of the census, and were also in receipt of pensions, such as army, navy, and police pensioners, as well as the large number of old age pensioners, are classified according to the occupation returned, and are, therefore, excluded from this Order.

Under the heading " Private Means " the numbers show a considerable decrease in 1911, but it is improbable that there has actually been a corresponding reduction in the number of persons deriving their incomes entirely from private sources. It was intended that the heading should not include any persons who had retired from an occupation, or who supplemented their private income by work of any kind. It was observed in the report on the census of 1901 that probably some persons who had retired and were unwilling to name their former occupations returned themselves as living on their own means. Possibly, with the general improvement of the returns, such defective statements may have been fewer at the later census, thus causing a transfer to the heading " retired." On the other hand, in 1901, persons neither following nor having retired from a profession or occupation, but deriving their incomes from private sources, were directed to return themselves as " Living on own means," but in 1911 "persons . . . . deriving their income from private sources or allowances" were instructed to write "Private means" in the occupation column of the schedule. This may have led to the inclusion under this heading of persons who were dependent on allowances from relatives, and would not have claimed to be living on their own means. Presumably the effect of the former consideration has been greater than that of the latter.

An attempt was made to ascertain the number of students and of scholars over 10 years of age, but the returns were so incomplete that it would have been misleading to give the figures in the several tables, and they have, therefore, been added to the heading " Others " in this Order. The wording of the schedule was quite explicit in requiring an entry in the occupation column for all children over 10 years attending school and for all persons over that age who were attending colleges, evening schools, or other instructional classes, or were receiving instruction privately. The extent to which the returns were incomplete in this respect may, however, be judged from the fact that there were no fewer than 314,637 boys and 459,356 girls between the ages of 10 and 15 who were apparently neither receiving instruction nor following an occupation, and a further 53,321 males and 415,798 unmarried females between the ages of 15 and 20. The females exceeded the males at each year of age, but the differences are not large at the ages 10, 11, and 12, when it may be presumed nearly all would be receiving instruction ; after these ages the preponderance of girls is doubtless due to the numbers engaged in domestic duties at home. Above the age of 20 years, 24,866 males and 13,369 females were returned as scholars or students not following an occupation.

The last heading in the Occupation Tables comprises, in addition to the scholars and students included for the reason given above, all persons who omitted to state their occupations. By far the largest class included under this heading, however, consists of wives without other than domestic occupation, and to a smaller extent of daughters and other female relatives similarly occupied.

The age-distribution of the " retired " differs somewhat from that of the " pensioners," owing to the numbers permanently incapacitated early in adult life coming into the former category ; thus, there were 7·3 per cent. of the " retired " males under 45 years of age, but only 5·8 per cent. of the " pensioners." It will, however, be convenient to consider the ages of pensioners and retired together. The following table shows the numbers in proportion to total occupied at age-groups, distinguishing those enumerated in workhouses and lunatic asylums, compared with the corresponding proportions in 1901 :—

* Less Officers of Army and Navy at both censuses, and Clergymen and Medical Men in 1901.

The steadiness of the rates for males at the first three age-groups is remarkable, and, in conjunction with the fact that most of the increase in the proportions at the age-groups 65– and 75– occurred elsewhere than in workhouse establishments or lunatic asylums, indicates that the rise is mainly due to old age pensioners. The majority of the "retired" under 45 years were, as in 1901, persons suffering from mental infirmities. In considering the proportions of retired to occupied under the several occupational headings it is necessary to bear in mind some of the principal causes of the wide variations. These were summarised in the report on the census of 1901 (page 130) in the following words :—

(1) The statements in the schedules as to the former callings of the "Retired" are generally less precise than are those as to the callings of those still occupied.

(2) Persons who retire from an occupation may either retire altogether or may engage in other occupations.

(3) The prevailing ages of retirement vary considerably in different occupations.

(4) The fact of the numbers engaged in any occupation being greater or less than in former years would cause the retired from that occupation to bear a greater or less proportion to the occupied—in other words, as they are the remnant of a greater or a smaller number than are now engaged in the occupation.

(5) Many females who have been employed in occupations while unmarried retire from those occupations when they marry. The fact of such persons having previously had occupations is not stated on the Census Schedules, and they are, therefore, not classed among the Retired.

Other considerations, such as the occupational age-distribution, occupational mortality, and the state of trade, must, however, not be overlooked.

The figures for labourers may again be taken as illustrating the effects of the causes numbered (1) and (2) above. The proportions in 1911 were as follows :—

The excessive proportions in the undefined group indicate partly the want of precision in the statement as to former occupation; they may, however, also be regarded as indicating the inclusion of men who had for the greater part of their working life followed some more definite occupation but had drifted into casual labour before finally becoming unoccupied.

To follow out in detail the extent to which each of the above-mentioned causes affects the proportion of retired to occupied under the various headings is impracticable, but their combined effect may be seen in the following examples of some of the occupations in which large numbers of persons were employed; the proportions of "retired" in workhouses and lunatic asylums being shown separately:—

Among the professions it is found that the proportion of clergymen of the Established Church who had retired was low, being only 3·93 per cent., and for the much smaller number of Roman Catholic priests was only 1·30, while among ministers of other religious bodies it was as high as 9·42 per cent.; for solicitors the proportion was 7·25 per cent.; for medical practitioners, 6·79 per cent.; for engineers and surveyors, 11·92 per cent.; for artists, architects, and engravers, 4·60 per cent.; for authors, editors, journalists, 2·93 per cent.; for musicians, 2·75 per cent., and for actors, 1·63 per cent.

The proportions of retired to occupied among females are, speaking generally, much lower than among males, chiefly on account of the large number of married women who, though formerly occupied, do not appear as "retired" in the tables. For all occupations the proportion of "retired" among unmarried females was equal to 1·19 per cent. of the "occupied"; among married females, 1·16 per cent., and among widows, 8·60 per cent. There is, however, nothing like a constant relation between the rates for unmarried and married in the several occupations, as will be seen from the examples of the more important female occupations given in the subjoined table:—

The rates for widows are, almost without exception, much higher than for the unmarried or for the married. At the several age-groups, however, the rates are consistently lower than for the unmarried, except for the smaller numbers below 35 years, while as compared with the married, the excess is not great at any age. The wide variation is, therefore, attributable to the different age-distribution of both the occupied and the retired of the unmarried, married, and widowed, respectively. The following table shows the proportion of "retired" females at the several age-groups, by marital condition, the last column showing a standardized rate calculated on the age-distribution of all occupied females:—

The age-distribution of persons classified under the heading "Private Means" shows that the majority were over 55 years of age, and suggests that there are still some persons returned under this heading who should have been returned as "Retired." Under the heading "Others" (including scholars and students) it may be observed that over 83 per cent. of the males and over 53 per cent. of the unmarried females were between 10 and 15 years of age; and of the eight million females over 15 years of age nearly three-quarters were wives.

6. GENERAL SUMMARY OF RESULTS.

Proportions Occupied.—The following figures indicate the proportions in which the population of both sexes aged 10 years and upwards was returned as engaged in gainful occupations, whether actually employed on the date of the census or not. This was the first census at which the inquiry as to occupation was restricted to persons over ten years of age, but at the censuses of 1891 and 1901 the numbers of children under ten years of age returned as engaged in occupations were so small that they were not considered to be worth abstraction. It must be remembered that women engaged in the duties of their own households are treated as "unoccupied" in the census tabulation.

The total population aged 10 years and upwards and the numbers and proportions classified as occupied in the above sense and unoccupied (i.e., without specified occupation or retired) are as follows :—

In 1901 the proportions per 1,000 aged 10 years and upwards engaged in occupations were—for males, 837 ; for total females, 316 ; for unmarried females, 523 ; and for married and widowed females, who were tabulated together, 132.

The proportions for females, especially those for married and widowed, are affected for purposes of comparison by a new instruction on the 1911 schedule. In the 1901 schedule occupiers were requested to "State the Occupation, if any, of each person (whether man, woman, or child)," but this instruction left doubt as to what was required with regard to the occupations of women assisting their relatives in business or engaged in domestic duties at home. This gap was filled at the present census by the following instruction :—"The occupations of women engaged in any business or profession, including women regularly engaged in assisting relatives in trade or business, must be fully stated. No entry should be made in the case of wives, daughters, or other female relatives wholly engaged in domestic duties at home." The first part of the instruction has resulted in the inclusion in the returns of a considerable number of women who in the absence of such directions would have been returned as without occupation (see also page xxxvi.). The second part of the instruction may to some small extent have restricted the return of females in domestic service, but, as daughters and other female relatives of the head of the family who were described as "housekeepers" or as assisting in household duties were included with the unoccupied in 1901, the proportions occupied have probably been but little affected for purposes of comparison by the change in the method of return in this respect. The great bulk of the women returned as assisting relatives in trade or business were wives and daughters assisting the head of the family in shops and other dealing businesses, and in boarding and lodging houses, and there is also a great increase in the number of female relatives returned as assisting in the work of farms.

Proportions of Males occupied at several ages.—The proportions of occupied persons vary greatly at the different age-periods, being naturally low at ages 10–15, and again at ages over 65. From 15–20 to 55–65 there are no great differences in the proportions, the maximum being reached at age 25–35, when 98·6 per cent. were returned as occupied. Although the proportion of occupied to total males aged 10 years and upwards was practically identical at the two censuses, viz., 838 in 1911, against 837 in 1901, there is a distinct difference between the ways in which this result has been attained. At the age-group 10–15 only 183 per 1,000 males were occupied in 1911, against 219 per 1,000 in 1901, and again at the two highest age-groups shown in the tables (65–75 and 75 and upwards) there was considerable reduction. A decline in the proportion occupied at 10–15 had been observed in 1901 as compared with 1891, when the proportion was 260 per 1,000; the proportion at ages over 65 has also been declining during the same period, the rate having fallen from 648 per 1,000 in 1891 to 606 in 1901 and 560 in 1911. The further decline in the last intercensal period is, therefore, to some extent a continuation of the tendency to enter occupations somewhat later in life than was formerly the case, and to discontinue them somewhat earlier; doubtless regulations as to school attendance have contributed to the continued falling-off among the children, while Old Age Pensions have accentuated the diminution of active employment among the aged. The diminished proportions of workers at the two extremes of working life are, however, rather more than compensated for by the slightly increased proportions now prevailing between 25 and 65.

The following table shows the proportions of occupied males at ages in England and Wales and in the aggregate of Urban Districts and of Rural Districts in 1901 and 1911 :—

Comparing the urban with the rural rates, the table shows that very much the same features are apparent in the figures for 1911 as in those for 1901. On the whole, the proportion occupied was greater in the urban than in the rural districts (842 per 1,000, against 826 per 1,000). Under 15 the proportions in 1911 were practically identical in both areas, though in 1901 the rural districts had a distinctly higher rate. At all age-groups between 15 and 55 the urban rate was higher than the rural and increasingly so in the later groups. After 55–, however, the proportion of occupied men declined more rapidly in the urban than in the rural districts, and at both censuses proportionally fewer men above this age were occupied in the former than in the latter areas, though the contrast was less marked in 1911 than in 1901.

The several Administrative Counties and County Boroughs show considerable diversity as regards the proportion of occupied to total males over ten years of age (see Table 22 A). Among the administrative counties, less than 80 per cent. were occupied in Surrey (79·0), West Sussex (79·3), Berkshire (79·5), Cardiganshire (79·7), and East Sussex (79·8); and upwards of 85 per cent. in Lincoln (Lindsey) (85·0), Derbyshire (85·3), Nottinghamshire (85·4), Glamorganshire (86·1), Lancashire (86·2), Monmouthshire (86·3), and Yorkshire, West Riding (86·4). Among the county boroughs and other towns of over 50,000 population the proportions ranged from 77·2 per cent. in Hastings, 77·4 in Eastbourne, 77·9 in Ilford, 78·3 in Bournemouth, 79·2 in Edmonton, and 79·6 in Bath, to 88·4 in Huddersfield and in Bury, 88·7 in Halifax, 88·9 in Bolton, 89·0 in Blackburn, 89·2 in Bradford, 89·3 in Burnley, 89·6 in Rochdale, and 89·8 in Oldham. These rates are, however, somewhat affected by the fact that many of the males in the unoccupied class are inmates of lunatic asylums or workhouses; thus, to the extent to which the population of a town, owing to the presence of such institutions, includes lunatics or aged paupers from other areas the proportion of occupied is reduced; while in those cases where the lunatics or aged paupers belonging to the town were enumerated elsewhere the proportion occupied is exaggerated. Ilford and Edmonton are examples of the former class, and Bolton and Rochdale of the latter. In all the towns quoted above as showing the lowest proportions of occupied males aged 10 years and upwards the proportions occupied at ages 10 to 14 were much below the average for England and Wales ; while in all those quoted as showing the highest proportions, employment of children was far above the average. There are, however, some considerable variations in the proportions both at the early ages and at the advanced ages, as will be seen from the following statement relating to the twenty-two large towns with the highest proportions of occupied males over 10 years. The intermediate age-groups between 20 and 45 have been omitted, the figures showing no feature of interest.

At ages under 14 the variations are probably due to local custom with regard to partial exemption from school attendance (see also page cxlii.) ; after age 14 attendance at school is a less important factor, and the differences must be ascribed mainly to the greater or less amount of boy labour in demand for the industries characteristic of the several towns. The fact that low proportions at the advanced ages are in some cases associated with high proportions under 14 may perhaps indicate that the prevailing industrial conditions are more favourable to the employment of juvenile labour than to that of adults, and it may be noted that the four towns—Oldham, Blackburn, Burnley, and Bury—which had the highest proportion of boys aged 14 engaged in occupations, all had low rates for men over 65. A similar fact was remarked in 1901 with regard to the same towns.

Numbers and Ages of Married Males in various occupations.—The numbers of married males in the various occupations, which have been ascertained for the first time at this census, are shown by age in Table 7, and in Table 20 these numbers are shown as proportions per 1,000 of the numbers occupied at all ages over 20 years and at six groups of ages in each occupation. From the table it will be seen that 645 per 1,000 of the occupied males aged 20 years and upwards were married, and that the proportion married rose from 145 per 1,000 at the age-group 20–25 to 825 at the age-group 45–55. After this age, owing to the increasing proportion of widowed, they fall to 661 per 1,000 at the age-group 65 and upwards. The proportions married aged 20 years and upwards vary from 104 per 1,000 in the case of Farmers' Relatives assisting in the work of the Farm to 892 per 1,000 in the case of Caretakers, Office Keepers (not Government). The following statement shows the principal occupations having the highest proportions and those having the lowest proportions of married males—occupations employing fewer than 10,000 males being excluded. It should be noted that, apart from any other consideration, the proportions are accounted for partly by the age-constitutions in the various occupations. Thus, most of the occupations showing high proportions of married men have lower proportions of males, married or otherwise, than the average at ages 20–35, and higher at ages 35 and onwards, the only exception among the occupations shown below being tramway service drivers, in which the proportions married at the younger ages are much in excess of the average. The converse is true of the occupations having low proportions of married men. Here the numbers at ages 20–35 were proportionally in excess of the average, with the exception of navvies, agricultural labourers, and general labourers. In order to show the effect of age-constitution in the several occupations on the proportions married, a standardized rate, calculated on the age-constitution of all occupied males, is also given. It will be seen that, on the assumption of a uniform age-constitution for all occupations, the high proportions are reduced without exception, and the low proportions are, with only two exceptions, raised. The exceptions are navvies and general labourers, the proportion of whom returned as married is remarkably low at all age-periods from 25 upwards.

Most of the occupations having high proportions of married males were consistently high at each age-period, but a few, e.g., Civil Service Messengers, Builders, and Non-conformist Ministers, were lower than the average at the first age-period, while Scavengers were lower than the average at the higher age-periods. Similarly, the occupations with low proportions married were low at each age-period, with the exceptions of Bank Officials and Drapers, who were above the average at the higher ages.

In most occupations the proportion of married males was highest at ages 35– or 45–, the few exceptions including Officers of the Army and Navy, Clergymen of the Established Church, Barristers, and Solicitors, among whom the maximum proportion of married was at age 55–65.

The proportion married in the total occupied between the ages of 20 and 25 was 145 per 1,000, but there are wide variations among the individual occupations, ranging from 18 for Medical Practitioners, 19 for Bankers, Bank Officials, Clerks, 20 for Domestic Indoor Servants in Hotels, and 21 for Army Officers, to 308 for Caretakers (not Government), 311 for Motor Bus Drivers and for Tramway Drivers, and 330 for Scavengers. Between the ages of 25 and 35, 612 per 1,000 of the occupied were married, the proportion ranging from 128 for Farmers' Relatives, 133 for Domestic Indoor Servants in Hotels, 283 for other Domestic Indoor Servants, 292 for Clergy of the Church of England, and 321 for Barristers, to 789 for Scavengers, 806 for Inn, Hotel, etc. Keepers, Publicans, 815 for Coffee House Keepers, and 844 for Caretakers. At ages 35–45 the average proportion married was 813; the proportion for most of the professional classes still remained low, while the proportions for Police, Railway Men, Motor Van and Bus Drivers and Tramway Drivers, Inn, Hotel, etc. Keepers, Publicans, Coffee House Keepers, and Caretakers were high. At ages 45–55 the proportions married were at their maximum, viz., 825 per 1,000, the principal occupations having low rates at this period being Farmers' Relatives (167), Domestic Indoor Servants in Hotels, etc. (410), Navvies (517), General Labourers (625), Domestic Indoor Servants, not in Hotels (703), Dock, Wharf Labourers (710), Artists (722), Barristers (729), Agricultural Labourers (735), and Seamen (740); those having high rates included Builders (917), Inn, Hotel—Keepers (917), Railway Ticket Examiners (920), Railway Guards (925), Park, Lodge, Gate—Keepers (925), Coffee House Keepers (928), Railway Signalmen (931), Caretakers, not Government (941), Police (943), and Domestic Motor Car Drivers, etc. (951).

Summary of Male Occupations in Urban and Rural Districts.—The distribution of particular occupations in urban and rural districts respectively can be studied in detail in Table 13, but in order to show in convenient form the relative prevalence of certain kinds of occupations in the two classes of area the numbers under the several headings have been grouped in the following table and are expressed as proportions per 10,000 males aged 10 years and upwards, the corresponding proportions for 1901 being given for comparison.

* The proportions for 1911 in these cases have been adjusted for comparison with 1901.

The above groups of occupations may be further condensed into four main classes, so as to show the proportions engaged in (a) Agriculture, (b) Manufactures and Mining, (c) Commercial Occupations, and (d) Other Occupations. The first class, represented by Order VII., employed 8·3 per cent. of the male population over 10 years of age, against 8·8 per cent. in 1901, while manufactures and mining (represented by Orders IX.–XXII., less the "dealers" in these orders) accounted for 42·3 per cent., against 43·9 per cent. in 1901. The decline in these two classes was balanced by an increase in both of the others. Commercial occupations, including transport services (represented by Orders V. and VI., and the "dealers" from Orders IX.–XXII.) employed 24·2 per cent. of the males in 1911, against 22·9 per cent. in 1901; and other occupations (represented by Orders I.–IV. and VIII.) employed 9·0 per cent. in 1911, against 8·1 per cent. Thus the numbers engaged in those occupations which may be regarded as definitely productive did not increase so much as the total population, while those engaged in distributive and other not directly productive occupations increased at a somewhat greater rate than the total population. The same general movement as between the two censuses is observable in both the urban and rural districts, though the distribution of the four classes is quite different in the two kinds of area. Agriculture employed about 30 per cent. of the males over 10 years of age in the rural districts, but only 2 per cent. in the urban districts. It is interesting to note, however, that manufactures and mining together employed an even greater proportion of the population in rural districts than did agriculture, the proportion amounting to over 31 per cent. in these districts, as against 45½ per cent. in the urban districts. The proportion of the male population in the rural districts engaged in commercial occupations was less than half that similarly employed in the urban districts (12 per cent., against 28 per cent.), while the miscellaneous class of occupations, comprising persons engaged in professional, domestic, government, etc. services, employed a rather greater proportion in the rural than in the urban districts (9·6 per cent., against 8·8 per cent.).

Males at several ages in groups of occupations, 1901 and 1911.—The summary of occupations, as given in Table L., may also be considered with respect to the ages of those returned under the various headings at the two censuses. These are shown in the following table in proportion to the total numbers living at the several ages :—

The general reduction in the proportion of the male population between 10 and 15 returned as "occupied" is found to affect nearly all the occupations specified above, the principal exceptions being under the headings "messengers, porters, etc.," for which the proportions at this age were the same at the two censuses, and "other dealers," for which the proportion in 1911 was much higher than in 1901, owing to the increased number of newsboys (see also page cxxi.). Between ages 15 and 65 there were considerable variations in the case of many of the occupations between the proportions in the several age-groups at the two censuses; after 65 the proportions occupied fall considerably, and are of comparatively minor importance. Among the occupations which showed increased proportions on the whole, there were increases at each successive age-group between 15– and 75–in the case of General or Local Government, Domestic Service, Commercial Occupations, Coal Miners, and Vehicle Makers; and between 20– and 75– in the case of Workers in Metals, Machines, etc.; in the case of Messengers, etc., the increases were limited to the age-groups below 25–, and in the case of Textile Workers there were increases except at the age-groups 25– and 35–.

Among the occupations in which the total proportion engaged showed a decrease, Farmers and Graziers, Workers in the Building Trade, and General Labourers showed decreased proportions at all ages below 65–, and Workers in the Wood and Furnishing Trade and Drivers, Stokers, etc. of stationary engines at all these age-groups except one, the decreases, as a rule, being most marked in the earlier periods; Workers in Dress showed an increased proportion at 15–20, but decreased proportions after that period; in the case of Farm Workers there were increased proportions at 15–20 and 20–25, but decreased proportions thereafter; while in the case of those engaged in transport service on roads there were decreased proportions at 15–20 and 20–25, but increased proportions in later life.

Proportions of Females occupied.—For reasons already stated (see page cxxviii.) the numbers of females returned at the last two censuses as "occupied" are not strictly comparable. The headings chiefly affected by the change referred to are those relating to (a) female relatives of farmers, (b) boarding-house and lodging-house keepers, and (c) shopkeeping and other dealing businesses in which relatives, especially wives, may assist. The following table shows the numbers in these three sections and the numbers in all other occupations :—

It will be seen that in "all other occupations" (which includes domestic and other allied services, professional occupations, commercial clerks, and all manufacturing industries) the total females increased from 3,817,453 to 4,258,405, or by 11·6 per cent.—the proportion to the female population aged 10 and upwards declining from 289 to 286 per 1,000; the unmarried increased from 3,036,850 to 3,392,441, or by 11·7 per cent.—the proportion to the unmarried population rising from 488 to 494 per 1,000; while the married or widowed increased from 780,603 to 865,964, or by 10·9 per cent.—the proportion to the married or widowed population falling from 112 to 108 per 1,000. On the other hand, in the occupations shown above as being chiefly affected by the change in the method of return, the total proportion of occupied females increased from 27 to 39 per 1,000; the proportion of unmarried rose from 35 to 51 per 1,000 unmarried, and of married or widowed from 20 to 28 per 1,000 married or widowed. Probably a large part of the recorded increase for the unmarried represents a real extension of female employment, but the same cannot be said of the recorded increase for the married and widowed.

The proportions of females occupied per 1,000 living at various age-groups in 1901 and 1911 are shown below.

In view of what has been stated above, comparison of the numbers engaged in occupations at the two censuses should be made only for the unmarried as being less affected by change in the method of return. It will be seen that, as in the case of the males, there has been a decline in the proportion occupied at the age-group 10–15, and again at the two age-groups 65–75 and 75 and upwards. Unlike the males, however, whose proportion of occupied showed no appreciable variation at the two age-groups 15–20 and 20–25, the proportion of single women occupied increased at both these age-groups; further, in each succeeding decade of age up to 55–65 the increase in the proportion occupied was much greater for single women than for males. The following table, by the separation of occupations into two groups—(a) those seriously affected by change in method of return (viz., the occupations specified in Table LII.) and (b) those not seriously affected by change in the method of return—enables the comparison of the numbers occupied at the several ages to be made with some degree of accuracy both for the unmarried and for the married or widowed under the group (b).

It will be seen that, generally speaking, a greater proportion of young women and a smaller proportion of old women are occupied than was the case ten years ago—i.e., where the comparison can properly be made. The turning point, however, is reached earlier in life by the married and widowed than by the single women.

The proportion of females occupied was on the whole greater in the urban than in the rural districts, the excess being more marked among the married than among either the unmarried or the widowed. At the several age-groups the proportion was greater in the urban districts among unmarried females at all ages except 75 and upwards, and among married women at all age-groups without exception; among widows, however, the rural rates were higher than the urban at the three age-groups 55–, 65–, and 75 and upwards. At age 10–15 the proportion occupied was considerably higher in the urban than in the rural districts, the rates for females differing in this respect from those for males, which, at this age-group, were almost identical in the two classes of area. It will be seen also that the excess in the urban proportions persists to a later age among females than among males (see Tables XLIX. and LV.). The rates for females are shown in the following table :—

The local variations in the proportions of occupied females were, as will be seen from Table 22, much greater than for males. Among the administrative counties the lowest proportions were found in Durham (15·80 per cent.), Monmouth (17·63), and Glamorgan (17·94), and the highest proportions in London (39·56) and Lancashire (40·86). In five other counties, viz., Northumberland, the Parts of Lindsey, the Parts of Kesteven, the Isle of Ely, and Norfolk, less than 25 per cent. of the females over 10 were returned as occupied ; while in nine others, viz., Surrey, Somerset, Worcester, Radnor, Westmorland, Leicester, Cheshire, Cardigan, and Bedford, upwards of one-third were occupied. Among the large towns there was naturally a wider range of proportions than in the counties, the lowest rates being 14·39 per cent. in Rhondda, 15·87 in Aberdare, 17·95 in Merthyr Tydfil, 18·06 in Rotherham, 19·32 in Gillingham, 19·36 in South Shields, and 19·97 in Middlesbrough ; while the highest rates were 45·04 in Bradford, 45·70 in Nottingham, 46·08 in Oldham, 47·44 in Leicester, 48·37 in Rochdale, 50·20 in Bury, 54·31 in Preston, 56·29 in Burnley, and 59·10 in Blackburn. High proportions of occupied females were found also in some of the metropolitan boroughs, viz., 45·66 per cent. in Shoreditch, 46·00 in Paddington, 48·75 in Hampstead, 50·21 in Chelsea, 51·58 in Kensington, 52·45 in Holborn, 54·30 in St. Marylebone, 56·37 in the City of Westminster, and 61·45 in the City of London.

The causes of low proportions in the counties and towns mentioned are fairly obvious, but in the case of some of the high proportions the causes appear to be more complicated. Reference to Table 22 will show that, with the exception of Lancashire and Leicestershire, the counties with high proportions of occupied females all have more than the average proportion of domestic servants, which in nearly all cases is the principal cause of their position in the list ; the extent to which other occupations are contributory causes is indicated in the table. Textile manufactures account for all the highest proportions in the large towns quoted, and domestic service for those in the metropolitan boroughs, except in Shoreditch.

Table 21 shows that among unmarried females over 10 years of age the proportion occupied averaged 54·5 per cent., varying in the large towns from 28·8 per cent. in Rhondda, 31·0 in Aberdare, and 34·4 in Merthyr Tydfil, to 74·5 in Preston, 76·6 in Burnley, and 78·0 in Blackburn. The proportion of married females engaged in occupations average 10·3 per cent., the extreme examples being, as in the case of the unmarried, Rhondda, Aberdare, and Merthyr Tydfil, with not more than 4 per cent., and Preston, Burnley, and Blackburn, with 35·3, 41·4, and 44·5 per cent. respectively. For both unmarried and married the general range of towns is very similar, the low rates of female employment being chiefly in the mining, engineering, and seaport towns, and the high rates in the cotton towns, and to a minor degree in the other textile towns. In some of the metropolitan boroughs very high rates for both unmarried and married were recorded. Among widows the proportion occupied averaged 30·1 per cent., and varied less, on the whole, than did those for the unmarried and married females. The lowest rates in the large towns were 15·2 in Rhondda, 17·2 in Aberdare, 18·4 in Ilford, 19·2 in St. Helens, 19·6 in Wakefield, 19·9 in Rotherham, 20·1 in Lincoln, and 20·8 in Merthyr Tydfil ; and the highest rates, 34·5 in Leicester, 34·8 in Liverpool and in Eastbourne, 35·9 in Brighton, 36·1 in Manchester, 36·9 in Aston Manor, Great Yarmouth, and in Worcester, 37·2 in Oxford, 37·5 in Acton, 39·3 in Birmingham, 39·8 in London, 41·5 in Blackpool, and 42·0 in Nottingham. The metropolitan boroughs showed some very high rates, reaching 50·7 in Bethnal Green, 52·2 in Shoreditch, 54·2 in the City of Westminster, 58·6 in Holborn, 60·0 in Finsbury, and 70·6 in the City of London.

When the comparison is extended to the smaller towns shown in Table 15 B the same characteristic distribution of high and low proportions is evident, though the range is naturally somewhat greater than in the large towns. Most of the smaller towns with the lowest proportions are in the mining districts of Durham, Monmouth, Northumberland, and Yorkshire; while those with the highest proportions of unmarried and married in occupations were comprised mainly in the districts where textile manufactures are carried on, though Luton and Redditch are notable exceptions. High proportions of occupied widows also are found in the two last-mentioned towns, but not, as a rule, in the textile towns; the towns with the highest proportions were Aberystwyth (49·6), Llandudno (50·0), and Aldershot (50·7). Altogether among the towns with over 5,000 population there were 39 in which over 75 per cent. of the unmarried females aged 10 years and upwards were occupied, 14 in which over 40 per cent. of the wives were occupied, and 15 in which over 40 per cent. of the widows were occupied.

Summary of Female Occupations.—The following table shows in summary form the proportions per 10,000 living at the two censuses of females in certain groups of occupations :—

From this table it is easy to see the varying degrees in which the several kinds of occupations have attracted female labour. The three principal headings in the table, Domestic Indoor Service, Workers in Textile Fabrics, and Workers in Dress, which together employed 57 per cent. of all occupied females, all showed decline since 1901, in relation to the total female population over 10 years of age; there was also a considerable falling-off in the proportional number engaged in Laundry and Washing Service, and a smaller decline in the proportion of female teachers; though comparison in the latter case is invalidated for the reason stated on page xxi. Female clerks were proportionally nearly twice as numerous in 1911 as in 1901, and there was also a marked increase in the proportion of women engaged in various professional occupations other than teaching, and in industrial occupations generally, with the two important exceptions mentioned above. The foregoing table also shows that though, apart from the occupations specified in Table LII. as being specially affected by change in the method of return, there has been a decline in the proportion of occupied married or widowed women, yet there have been increases under several of the occupational groups. The professional occupations (except nursing) and textile manufactures are conspicuous examples of such increases.

The following table enables comparison to be made between the proportions of females in groups of occupations in urban and rural districts respectively :—

The preponderance of commercial and industrial occupations in the urban districts is clearly shown by the table, as is also the fact that domestic service employed a much larger proportion of women (unmarried and widowed) in the rural than in the urban districts. The total proportion of females over 10 years of age returned as occupied was 34·31 per cent. in the urban, against 25·79 per cent. in the rural districts, and among married women the proportion was nearly twice as high in the former as in the latter (11·48 per cent., against 5·87 per cent.).

Females at several Ages in Groups of Occupations, 1901 and 1911.—In order to supplement the information given in Table LVI. as to the proportion of the female population following certain occupations in 1901 and 1911 respectively, the following table showing how the proportions in the several age-groups have varied at the two censuses has been compiled :—

In most occupations a total increase or decrease is shared by all the age-groups, though there is much irregularity in the figures in some cases. The proportion of the unmarried female population returned as sick nurses, etc., showed an increase at each age-group, reaching a maximum at 35–45, but among the married or widowed there was a decreased proportion at all ages, especially over 65. Unmarried teachers formed a smaller proportion of the female population under 20 in 1911 than in 1901 (see also page xxi.), but an increased proportion above that age, while the married or widowed were proportionally fewer up to age 45. In other professional occupations females showed a proportional increase at all ages above 15. Domestic servants showed a decreased proportion at all ages among the unmarried, but increased proportions at ages under 45 among the married or widowed. In laundry and washing service the decreased proportion of married or widowed women was greatest at the higher ages. In textile manufactures the proportion of unmarried females decreased up to age 45, but increased above that age, while the proportion of married or widowed showed an increase up to 45–55, but a decrease at the later periods.

The proportions of females in certain occupations, and their variations at successive censuses from 1861, may be seen from the following table, and for the four censuses from 1881 onwards may be calculated for any occupational heading from the figures given in Table 26. These tables relate to the whole country, but it may be pointed out that the relative numbers of the two sexes in certain occupations vary considerably in different localities (see, for example, Table XXXIX. with reference to Boot and Shoe Making).

The Table may be read thus :—

Of 1,000 persons employed as Commercial Clerks in 1861, 5 were females ; of 1,000 similarly employed in 1871, 16 were females ; . . . . . and of 1,000 in 1911, 245 were females. (The Table, of course, gives no indication as to the growth or decline of any occupation ; it only shows the number of females relative to the aggregate of males and females at each Census.)

Employment of Children and Young Persons.—Frequent allusion has been made in the course of the preceding section (Analysis of Orders and Sub-orders) to the decline in the numbers of children and young persons returned under several of the occupational headings, and the following comparative statement shows the general reduction in the proportion of children between the ages of 10 and 15 years who have been returned at successive censuses from 1851 as following an occupation :—

Census.	Proportion per cent. "occupied" in each sex at ages 10–15.		Census.	Proportion per cent. "occupied" in each sex at ages 10–15.

1871	32·1	20·4	1911	18·3	10·4
1881*	22·9	15·1

* The figures for 1881 include the occupied children under 10 years of age, but the numbers are so small that their inclusion may be disregarded.

The figures for all the single years of life in this age-period are not available for censuses before 1911, but comparison can be made with 1901 for the total under 13, 13–14, and 14–15, as follows :—

	Proportion per cent. Occupied in each Sex.
	Males.				Females.
	10–13.	13–14.	Total 10–14.	14–15.	10–13.	13–14.	Total 10–14.	14–15.

1911	2·0	21·9	6·9	65·0	1·0	11·3	3·5	38·7

At age 10 only 841, or 0·2 per cent., of the boys were returned as occupied in 1911, and only 3,040, or 0·9 per cent., at age 11 ; the number of girls returned as occupied at these ages was negligible, amounting to only 217 in all. At age 12 the number of boys so returned was 17,699, or 5·1 per cent. of the total, and the number of girls, 10,026, or 2·9 per cent.

As illustrating the local distribution of juvenile employment, the following comparison may be made for the large towns in which upwards of 10 per cent. of either sex at ages 10–14 were returned as employed in 1911. It will be seen that in many of these towns the proportions in 1911 are actually greater than in 1901.

It will be noticed that the large textile towns of Lancashire and Yorkshire (West Riding) figure prominently in the above list, and some of the smaller towns in these counties show even higher proportions ; thus in Lancashire there were no fewer than 37 towns and in Yorkshire (West Riding) 18 towns with populations from 5,000 to 50,000 in which upwards of 25 per cent. of the boys or girls between 10 and 14 were employed. Table 24 shows the proportions in all towns of over 5,000 population, with additional details for ages 12 and 13 in the towns where the proportions occupied at those ages were highest.

Employment and School Attendance.—The question of employment at these ages is associated to some extent with that of exemption or partial exemption from attendance at school. With very few exceptions the limits of age for compulsory attendance are from 5 to 14 years, but most authorities provide for total or partial exemption for purposes of employment only under certain conditions. With a view to ascertaining how far attendance at school, either for full time or part time, was combined with other occupation, instructions were given for filling up the schedule in such a way as to provide full information in these cases. The children concerned were to be returned either as " scholar, full time," or as " scholar, part time," the other occupation followed being added in each case. The returns, however, were obviously incomplete in this respect ; and to some extent the question was misunderstood, for there were cases of children returned as " part time " scholars at 10 and 11 years of age, though there is no partial exemption under 12 years of age except to a very limited extent for children employed in agriculture. The Board of Education returns showed that there were on the registers on the last day of the school year in 1910–11, 34,190 part time scholars (of whom 42 were under 12, 25,227 were aged 12–13, and 8,921 aged 13–14), while the census returns showed only 20,371. Moreover, the latter total includes 575 under 12 years of age practically none of whom—seeing that only eight were returned as employed in agriculture—could have been part-timers. It should be noted in this connexion, however, that partial exemption from school attendance in agricultural districts consists generally of entire exemption from school for certain months of the year, and not, as in the textile districts, in attendance at the mill for half the day and at school for the other half (see Report on Partial Exemption from School Attendance, Cd. 4,791). The deficiencies of the census return are apparent from the following statement of the numbers of children of school age returned as following gainful occupations, and it would, therefore, be undesirabie to attempt a detailed analysis by occupation of the numbers for whom statements as to school attendance were made.

	Engaged in Occupations.

It will be seen that of the boys engaged in occupations a much larger proportion were returned as full time scholars than was the case for girls.

Doubtless many of the children aged 13–14 for whom no statement was made as to school attendance had in fact left school, but for those aged 12–13 it is impossible to say how many were full time and how many were part time scholars.

Taking the returns as they stand, they show that, as might be inferred from the list of towns on page cxlii, the majority of "part timers" are engaged in textile trades, cotton manufacture accounting for 4,200 out of the 11,479 boys, and for 5,102 out of the 8,892 girls; and wool, worsted manufacture for 2,332 boys and 2,433 girls. The only other considerable numbers of "part timers" were the 2,075 boys returned as messengers, etc., and the 933 returned as "newsboys." Among the 14,825 boys returned as scholars (full time or undefined), 6,228 were "newsboys" and 6,804 were "messengers," the latter including 1,489 employed by grocers, 1,415 by milksellers, 589 by butchers, 376 by newsagents, 350 by bakers, and 226 by greengrocers.

Occupations of Children aged 10–14.—Of the 2,812,433 children between the ages of 10 and 14 years, 146,417, or 5·2 per cent., were returned as occupied. The boys numbered 97,141, or 6·9 per cent. of the total boys, and the girls 49,276, or 3·5 per cent. of the total girls. The occupations in which they are principally employed are, for the most part, well known; thus, of the boys, 24,870 were messengers, etc.; 23,399 were employed in textile manufactures, of whom 14,387 were in cotton and 6,391 in wool and worsted manufactures; 8,252 were newsboys; 8,121 were engaged in coal-mining (including 5,371 returned as working below ground); and 7,803 were agricultural labourers. These few occupations account for nearly three-fourths of the total, the only other occupations employing more than 1,000 boys being domestic service, boot and shoe making, and hairdressing, while 1,267 boy relatives of farmers and graziers were returned as assisting in the work of the farm. Of the 3,881 boys under 12 years returned as occupied, 1,756 were newsboys and 1,667 messengers; and these occupations, together with the textile manufactures, found employment for the majority of those occupied between 12 and 13.

From the table it will be seen that the decline (from 10·35 per cent. to 6·92 per cent.) in the total proportion occupied was shared by nearly all the various occupations. In the textile manufactures, however, the proportional decrease was very small, the actual number employed in wool and worsted manufactures showing a slight rise. The only occupation in which there was a serious increase in the numbers employed under 14 years of age was that of newsboys, already referred to on page cxxii.

The table shows that at ages under 13 there has been a great reduction in the numbers under all the headings except messengers, textile manufactures, newsboys, and hairdressers, which in 1911 included more than 90 per cent. of the total number of boys returned as occupied at these ages. Some part of the apparent increase under these headings may be due to a more complete return, in consequence of the revised instruction (No. 5) on the schedule, of the occupations of children at these ages who were also attending school. At age 13–14 the proportion occupied fell from 34·7 to 21·9 per cent. of the number living; at that age there appears to have been a large decrease in the number of messengers—who were equal to 5·7 per cent. of the number living in 1911, against 9·2 per cent. in 1901. The number of boys aged 13–14 employed in agriculture also declined from 5·0 to 2·7 per cent., in coal mining from 3·7 to 2·3 per cent., and in the metal and engineering trades from 2·0 to 1·2 per cent.

More than half the total number of girls under 14 engaged in occupations were employed in textile manufactures and over a third of the remainder in domestic service. The variations in the numbers in the principal occupations, as compared with 1901, are shown in the following table :—

The percentage of girls between 10 and 14 years of age is shown by the table to have fallen from 5·25 in 1901 to 3·50 in 1911. Here, as was shown to be the case with boys, there has been very little reduction of employment in textile manufactures; in domestic service, however, the number decreased by more than 12,000. It will be seen that at ages under 13 textile manufactures accounted for 8,874 out of the 10,243 girls returned as occupied in 1911, against 9,339 out of the 13,314 in 1901, while in domestic service the numbers employed at these ages were only 435, against 2,657 in 1901. At age 13–14 the proportion returned as occupied fell from 17·2 to 11·3 per cent., domestic service employing only 2·1 per cent., against 5·5 per cent. in 1901.

Occupations of Young Persons.—The foregoing paragraphs relating to the occupations of children of school age may be taken as indicating roughly the extent to which industrial employment interferes with the normal course of elementary education. Above 14 and under 21 years of age the principal point of interest is the relation of juvenile to adult workers in the various occupations. A study of Table 14 will show how many were employed in what have been termed " blind alley " occupations, i.e., occupations which attract youths in large numbers, but afford no prospect of permanent employment; in addition to these there are many others in which the proportion under 20 was much above the average. The following table shows the principal occupations in which the numbers employed under 20 bear a high proportion to the total.

It will be seen that in addition to " Van—Guards, Boys," who were nearly all under 20, there were four other occupations in which the numbers under 20 exceeded those over 20, the proportions among newsboys being 4,529 under 20 to 1,000 over 20; among post office messengers, 3,125; and among other messengers, 2,732. The total number of males between 10 and 21 years of age was 3,710,854, and of these 2,135,360, or 57·5 per cent., were occupied, though the proportions occupied at the several years of age in this period naturally differ widely. An approximation to the numbers entering occupations can be obtained for the earlier years by deducting the numbers employed at any given age from those employed at the next year of age. This method makes no allowance for the numbers withdrawn, either by death, migration, or other causes, but the results serve to indicate that by far the largest number begin work between 14 and 15, the excess of boys employed at age 14–15 over those at age 13–14 being more than two and a half times as great as the excess for the preceding as well as for the succeeding year of age ; for girls the difference is not so striking. The actual figures are as follows :—

Males.			Females.

Above 16 the numbers entering occupations diminish rapidly, and by the time 19 is reached the additions to the ranks of the occupied are so few that they are outnumbered by the withdrawals. The following table shows the proportion per cent. of males occupied to the total population at each age from 10 to 21 and the proportion per cent. in some of the occupations employing large numbers of minors :—

It will be seen that among the males the proportion occupied rises continuously from 0·2 per cent. at age 10 to 96·5 per cent. at age 20, but that in each of the above five occupations the maximum proportion is reached at one of the earlier ages.

Among females the maximum proportion occupied is found at age 18, the numbers married beginning to affect the proportions at 19 and 20.

The following table shows the age-constitution of the males under 21 in some of the principal occupations :—

In the majority of these occupations the proportion between 18 and 21 does not differ very materially from the average for all occupations, namely, 434 per 1,000 aged 10–21. The most conspicuous examples of occupations in which the numbers between 10 and 18 exceeded those between 18 and 21 are post office messengers, of whom 966 per 1,000 of the total between 10 and 21 years of age were under 18; newsboys, for whom the proportion was 931 per 1,000; messengers, porters, etc. (not railway or government), with 919 per 1,000; van, etc. guards, boys, with 870 per 1,000; and those in wool and worsted spinning processes, with 853 per 1,000. Less marked, but still much above the average, were the proportions for those employed in cotton spinning and weaving processes and for those working above ground at coal mines. The few cases in which the majority of workers between 10 and 21 years of age were over 18 included railway officials and clerks; blacksmiths, strikers; erectors, fitters, turners; motor car chassis makers, motor car mechanics; and soldiers.

Apprentices.—The numbers of apprentices in the various trades, which might be considered in relation to the numbers of young persons employed in them, cannot be fully ascertained from the census returns. Apart from the difficulty generally experienced in obtaining reliable information as to occupational status, there is the further fact that no direct instruction was given on the schedule for apprentices to be returned as such, and the numbers which were returned were doubtless below the actual numbers. For this reason they have not been shown in the principal tables; but as they were recorded during the process of tabulation, and as it may be assumed that deficiencies would not be much more pronounced in one occupation than in another, some of the occupations under which the largest numbers of apprentices were returned are given below as possessing some interest, although they must not be regarded as being an accurate statement of facts.

Summary of Industries or Services.—The following table affords a general view of the relative numerical importance of some of the principal industries or services. The table is limited to those cases in which the net total number of workers, as shown in Table 29, exceeded 200,000 persons, and the numbers classified to the corresponding headings in the occupation tables are also shown in order to indicate the extent to which the occupational and industrial classifications differ in these cases.

From this table it appears that, exclusive of domestic service, agriculture affords employment to more persons that does any other single industry or service. Coal mining comes next in numerical importance, and is followed by the building trades and cotton manufacture. The same sequence is shown in these cases both by the industry and the occupation tables, the differences between the additional workers following other occupations in connexion with these industries and the deductions on account of persons following these occupations in connexion with other industries being small in relation to the totals.

In " Local Government Service " and " Railway Companies' Service," however, the occupation figures are very much augmented by the industry tabulation, and the totals shown, as a result of that tabulation, include all persons in the various branches of those services, some of which are included also under other headings in the tables ; thus, for example, teachers employed by Local Authorities are shown under the heading " Teaching " as well as under " Local Government," and persons employed in Railway Companies' Hotels are shown under the heading " Inn, Hotel, Service," as well as under " Railway Companies' Service." The only other case in which the " nature of the employer's business " has been regarded from two points of view is " National Government," and in these three cases the numbers of persons employed in the services which may be considered either in relation to National Government, Local Government, and Railway Companies' Service, or in relation to the several industries in which those bodies are directly concerned, are summarised on pages 840 to 851. Generally speaking, however, in tabulating the information given in column 11 of the schedule the statement as to the nature of the employer's business was sufficient to establish the connexion of the worker with a single industry or service. The inter-dependence of many of the several industries makes it impossible to claim that the numbers as tabulated represent all the persons who, in the widest sense, might be said to be connected with any industry. Thus, for example, persons engaged in making various kinds of machinery are to some extent connected with all the industries in which such machinery is used, but it would obviously have been impracticable to deal with them except as connected with the industry of machine making.

With these limitations, it is believed that this new inquiry as to industry has enabled us to present statistics which usefully supplement those tabulated with respect to personal occupation. This double tabulation has necessarily involved much additional labour, and has been attended by difficulties and complexities which could not have been foreseen at the outset. The value of the results is to some extent depreciated by the fact that there are no earlier records with which to compare them, but if it is deemed desirable to repeat on a future occasion the collection of similar data, the industry figures now submitted will, in spite of the imperfections inseparable from a first attempt, furnish a comparative basis ; and both for this reason and on account of the present interest of the figures, we are of opinion that the experiment of attempting to show the relation of personal occupation to industry or service has been justified.

We desire to place on record our sense of the valuable services rendered to us by Mr. D. Ll. Evans, upon whom has fallen the responsibility of the detailed work of classification and tabulation embodied in this section of the Census Report.

We have the honour to be,

Sir,

Your most obedient servants,

BERNARD MALLET, Registrar-General.

T. H. C. STEVENSON.

T. A. SAUNDERS, Acting Secretary.

OCCUPATIONS.

NOTE.—In classifying the people by their Occupations the following rules have been observed :—Persons returned as "Pensioners" or as "Retired" from any specified profession or business (except Officers of the Army or Navy) are included under the headings "Pensioners" or "Retired" (Order XXIII.). Inmates of Lunatic Asylums or of Workhouses, when returned as Insane and yet described by their former occupations, have—irrespective of age—been classed as "Retired"; so also have other Inmates of Workhouses aged 60 years and upwards whose former occupations were returned. Other Inmates of Institutions and Prisoners of all ages have been classed under their stated occupations on the assumption that their ordinary work has been relinquished for a time only. The former occupations of "Pensioners" and "Retired" are given for England and Wales in Table 17.

The numbers given under the headings for manufactures include Apprentices, Assistants, Workmen, and Labourers, as well as Masters, but exclude Messengers, Errand Boys, Porters (except if occupied in carrying materials in processes of manufacture), Watchmen, Engine Drivers and Stokers, Clerks, and Workmen following a trade for which a special heading is provided. For dealing businesses the rule is modified, General Labourers in these cases being included under the heading "General Labourer" (Order XXII.). Clerks not connected with manufacturing or dealing businesses are classified to the heading for the Service in which they are engaged. In professional occupations and their subordinate services Assistants are in some cases classed to special headings for subordinates.

In some cases women and children, chiefly widows or orphans, carrying on the business of their husbands or fathers, are classed under Occupations commonly followed only by adult males.

In the list of Occupations the Male designations only are given for convenience, except where the occupations are exclusively followed by Females.

(TABLE 13 appears in Vol. X., Part II.).

TABLE 10.—OCCUPATIONS of FEMALES (UNMARRIED, MARRIED, and WIDOWED) AGED 10 YEARS AND UPWARDS, at NINE GROUPS of AGES, in LANCASHIRE, distinguishing for those engaged in certain industries the numbers returned as "EMPLOYERS," "WORKING FOR EMPLOYERS," "WORKING ON OWN ACCOUNT," and "OTHERS"; also as "WORKING AT HOME," 1911.

The figures for Unmarried stand first in each case and are printed in ordinary type, those for Married second and in French type, and those for Widowed third and in Italic type.

NOTE.—This Table is supplementary to Table 5, and contains only the occupational headings against which Females are shown in that Table.
The sign * prefixed to an occupational heading not shown separately denotes that all the Females classified to that heading in Table 5 were Unmarried, † that all were Married, ‡ that all were Widowed.

ABLE 11.—OCCUPATIONS of FEMALES (UNMARRIED, MARRIED, and WIDOWED) AGED 10 YEARS AND UPWARDS, at NINE GROUPS of AGES, in YORKSHIRE, distinguishing for those engaged in certain industries the numbers returned as "EMPLOYERS," "WORKING FOR EMPLOYERS," "WORKING ON OWN ACCOUNT," and "OTHERS"; also as "WORKING AT HOME," 1911.

The figures for Unmarried stand first in each case and are printed in ordinary type, those for Married second and in French type, and those for Widowed third and in Italic type.
